Landon Calm As Campaign For President Gains Impetus

Standard Oil, Sinclair Aid Whispers Leave Him Unruffled.

Backers in Kansas Call Him a Liberal

Other Republicans Given No Chance by West to Defeat Roosevelt.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A Staff Correspondent.

Topeka, Kans., April 4.—Neither the phenomenal success which he is achieving as an aspirant for the Republican Presidential nomination nor the whispering campaigns in Washington that he will be subjected to severe attack from within his party seems in any way to have ruffled or disturbed Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas.

He remains as calm about this business of running for President as though he occupied the most humdrum job and never had his name in the newspapers. There is neither exaltation nor excitement about the man. This sounds like the "strong silent man" stuff, but nevertheless it is the man Landon.

It is not a pose. He does not make any pretense that he is not a serious candidate for the Republican nomination. Nor does he pretend ignorance of the fact that he is in the forefront of the Republican Presidential race and on the first ballot at Cleveland—as things are now going—may have from 300 to 400 votes, with strong secondary support.

Nor does he pretend that there is any reason for his present course of sticking to his gubernatorial job and refraining from a speaking tour than that it is good strategy—and certainly anyone who considers that a year ago he was hardly known to the country outside of Kansas will agree.

Clings to Quiet Tactics.

He does not propose to make any substantial change in his present tactics. He has agreed to a radio interview on a national hookup on April 30, and he may make another speech before the Cleveland convention—in addition to a message to a special session of the Legislature if one is called—but he has no plans for other speeches, nor does he propose to do any traveling.

Gov. Landon does not think anything that has been said about him so far requires an answer from him. His record in this State is pointed to when he is told that his opponents seek to align him with the Standard Oil interests; that he is the choice of the "Old Guard" Republicans; that he is a tool of "the interests."

He laughs quietly when told these things, his deep dark brown eyes—which give his face warmth—twinkling. Those in charge of his campaign laugh loudly at such stories—but they, realizing the East does not know Gov. Landon as does Kansas, dig into the records for the answers.

Defies "Mud Throwers."

"Listen," says one of the Governor's aids, "if they can dig anything up on Alf Landon, then they're good. He was twice opposed for the governorship by Doc Brinkley, the goat-gland specialist and the doc was out to get Landon. He charged him with everything in sight—being dominated by the interests, beholden to Standard Oil and a lot more. If none of the mud thrown at Landon in those two campaigns stuck, it is unlikely men with any regard for the truth will make anything stick."

In Kansas Gov. Landon is regarded as a "liberal" or "progressive"—not the Sockless Jerry Simpson type of progressive, nor the Borah, La Follette or Norris type. Without shouting from the housetops, Gov. Landon has worked for progressive social legislation, with ability to pay, however, as a rigid limitation.

Although he has been interested in politics since he could vote, Gov. Landon has never been a rigid party man nor was he ever affiliated with the Kansas "Old Guard." Elections usually found him fighting Dave Mulvane, the old conservative Kansas boss.

In 1912 Gov. Landon went into the Bull Moose movement under Theodore Roosevelt and in 1924, when both Republican and Democratic parties failed to take a stand condemning the Ku Klux Klan, he supported William A. White for Governor on a platform denouncing the Klan. The latter was a hopeless fight and everyone knew it, but it was a fight for a principle and that attracted Gov. Landon.

Toryism Disclaimed.

These things are cited here as evidence that Gov. Landon is neither an Old Guard party hack nor a Tory. As for the contention that he is the choice of the Republican "Old Guard," the revolt this week of the rank-and-file Republicans in Kentucky against their leaders, who wished an uninstructed delegation, is cited as evidence that his support is coming up from the grass roots and from the counties—not down from State bosses, "Old Guard" or otherwise. The same development has occurred in half a dozen States.

As for any subservience to the Standard Oil, Gov. Landon, it is

Fletcher Finds G. O. P. Ready 3 Months Early

Party $250,000 'Out of Red'; Hoover Sees Invasion of Liberty.

Political Highlights

The regional conference of Republican leaders here yesterday was informed that the party is now $250,000 "out of the red" and three months ahead of previous campaigns in its organization work.

Former President Herbert Hoover, at Fort Wayne, Ind., continued his attacks on the New Deal, charging it with "corruption of clear thinking."

Senator William E. Borah was en route to Milwaukee to speak in his campaign for Wisconsin delegates at the nominating convention, to be selected Tuesday.

Frank E. Gannett, Borah's running mate in Ohio, declared at Columbus that Presidential hopes of the Republicans lie in nomination of such a "liberal" as Borah.

Col. Frank Knox, at a "favorite son" rally for him at Chicago, urged a six-point program to guide the G. O. P. in the campaign.

Arkansas Democrats pledged the State's 18 votes at Philadelphia to Roosevelt and Garner.

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Henry P. Fletcher predicted yesterday that the Republican Party will be ready to go into the 1936 campaign three months earlier than that in previous election years.

Fletcher met yesterday with party leaders from five Eastern Seaboard States.

Saying he expected to have a complete organization ready by June, Fletcher added that in previous years "some divisions of the national campaign organization have not been ready to function until as late as October."

"This year we will be so situated that the new chairman and the new committee may start right off with a machine geared to go," he said.

"Within a week, or 10 days, we shall have a real research organization ready to operate under the direction of Dr. O. G. Saxon, professor of economics at Yale," Fletcher said.

He said the national party treasury was $250,000 "out of the red," and added that there are "prospects of my successor having plenty of

Thousands to See Blossoms; Fair and Warmer Due Today

Ten Special Trains, Bus, Plane and Auto Traffic Bring Visitors to City for Display; Wife of Japanese Ambassador to Inspect Blooms.

The Japanese cherry blossoms, Washington's greatest drawing card at this season of the year, will display their pink elegance today for tens of thousands of visitors—students, school teachers, honeymooners, conventionnaires and just plain residents.

Given the benediction of the weather man, who says today will be fair and warmer, the good-will trees are expected to be in full bloom. Throngs previewed them yesterday, foreshadowing a record turnout on this Palm Sunday when trains, buses and airplanes will be discharging thousands of out-of-towners attracted by the annual Tidal Basin display.

The international aspect of the occasion will be picturesquely emphasized this afternoon when Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, and their two daughters inspect the blooms.

For the first time since he came to Washington, Mr. Saito will forego the traditional ambassadorial review. He left the city Friday to fulfill an engagement in Georgia and plans to return tomorrow, it was said at the embassy. It is likely, however, that he will view the blossoms later in the week under less formal circumstances.

In the diplomatic party today will be Mme. Saito, Sakiko, 9, and Masako, 7. Also Mme. Yoshizawa, wife of the counselor, and their children. The mothers will be attired in native garb, but the youngsters will be togged very much like the American boys and girls who will be looking on when Sakiko makes her little speech.

U. S. Chamber Assails 'Vague' Tax Bill Details

May Await Senate Hearing to Present Views on Corporate Levy.

House failure to draft a detailed bill setting forth the Administration's tax proposals yesterday drew a rebuke from the United States Chamber of Commerce, which has declined to appear before the House Ways and Means Committee hearings pending formulation of a definite tax plan.

As Chairman Robert L. Doughton strove to complete hearings on a tentative sub-committee report by tomorrow night, the chamber called a meeting of its tax committee for tomorrow. In an authoritative quarter it was stated that the chamber may decide to present its entire case before the Senate Finance Committee.

Ways and Mean Democrats meanwhile informally discussed minor modifications in pending tax proposals, levying a steeply graduated

Traffic Action Slated as Rider On Budget Bill

Thomas Calls for Reports by D. C. Officials on Steps to Remedy Conditions

By James D. Secrest.

Washington's traffic problem will be attacked from a new angle this week when the Traffic Department and the Corporation Counsel report to the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations on what's wrong and what new legislation is necessary to improve conditions.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, chairman of the sub-committee, disclosed yesterday that he has instructed the District Commissioners to make the reports so that a legislative rider may be tacked on the 1937 District supply bill.

"The traffic congestion and parking are intolerable," Thomas commented.

Chairman King of the Senate District Committee, who introduced a resolution to investigate traffic problems here, is co-operating in the new move, Thomas said. While a legislative rider would be subject to a point of order, the Oklahoma Senator believes that the rider would not be challenged because of the consensus of Congress that some remedy should be found.

A sub-committee of the House District Committee has conducted extensive hearings on traffic, but has not filed its report or recommendations.

Thomas also intimated that the sub-committee will not increase the House appropriation of $1,506,000 for emergency relief on the ground that Congress will reconvene next January and that there will be sufficient time to make deficiency appropriations then.

"This unemployment problem is far from solved," he observed. "If the Republicans should win next November, it will be their problem; if the Democrats win, it will continue to be ours."

Postponement of the relief problem doubtless will delay action on any increased or additional municipal taxes, as the District Commissioners have been seeking new sources of revenue under the assumption that the appropriation for

Navy Plane Carrier Yorktown Christened by Mrs. Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

Newport News, Va., April 4.—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, an outspoken opponent of war, but an advocate of armament for defense, today sponsored the launching of the Navy's newest fighting machine, the aircraft carrier U. S. S. Yorktown.

The broad-decked vessel, designed to mother a brood of 100 or more planes and carry more than 2,000 men, was the first ship launched in the Roosevelt Navy building program authorized in 1933.

Mrs. Roosevelt said, after the launching, that she considered her sponsorship of a war vessel by no means incompatible with her frequent speeches against war.

"One country by itself cannot limit armaments," she said. "I hope some day the nations will agree to arms limitations, but until then we must build our navy to treaty strength in order not to be defenseless against attack."

The First Lady, accompanied by her grandchildren, "Sistie" and "Buzzie" Dall—both appropriately dressed in navy blue—Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co., and Miss Lorena Hickock, of the White House staff, mounted the launching platform at 9:30 a. m.

A scant 30 minutes later, she dashed a bottle of champagne against the glistening white prow and the bunting-draped ship glided from her cradle into the James River. Obviously enjoying the privilege, Mrs. Roosevelt lustily swung the bottle, dangling on a beribboned cord, against the towering hull.

To the accompaniment of shrieking whistles, the martial strains of the Second Coast Artillery Band

Wallace Asked To Supply Data On AAA Checks

Senate Group Demands the Names of All Receiving $1,000 or More.

By Robert C. Albright.

Tearing at the secrecy veil thrown around big benefit checks to farmers under invalidated AAA, the Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday approved a resolution calling on Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace for names of persons receiving benefit payments in excess of $1,000.

Charged with political explosives, the data has been carefully guarded by Wallace, who first claimed the compilation would be almost physically impossible and then jokingly warned of the danger of "kidnaping" to daughters of farmers receiving large checks.

It was the second slap in the face dealt the Administration by the Senate group. At the same meeting the committee voted overwhelmingly to ask the Senate to override the President's veto on the $50,000,000 seed loan bill, sponsored by Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, committee chairman.

The seed-loan vote came in defiance of renewed Presidential admonitions that appropriations must be kept within budget limitations. Only yesterday the White House sent a memorandum to House and Senate leaders to hold down appropriations, particularly aimed at not letting flood relief run out of bounds.

Implications of the demand for AAA benefit data tied into a series of developments equally significant politically. Early this week the Senate amended its campaign expenditures investigation authorization, to provide for inquiry into the use of relief and other public funds for political purposes. Meanwhile Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee are preparing to solicit information on the latter point, when the Works Progress Administrator appears before the group, probably Tuesday, to account for his share of the last $4,880,000,000 relief appropriation, and tell how he expects to spend the new allotment of $1,500,000,000 asked by the President.

Congressional Republicans have been trying to uncover the size of benefit checks to farmers ever since Farm Administrator Chester C. Davis appeared before the House Appropriations Committee several weeks ago and told members that new "soil-conservation" benefits to farmers will start to flow in October, a month before the next elections.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, a "dark-horse" Republican Presidential possibility, offered the resolution demanding the benefit-payment information. But as he offered it, Wallace was called on only to supply the names of beneficiaries receiving more than $10,000. The committee yesterday unanimously broadened its scope to cover all persons receiving more than $1,000.

Just before the committee meeting Secretary Wallace sent to the Capitol a report listing the larger AAA beneficiaries by commodities and amounts received, but gave no names. Chairman Smith declined to make the report public, but it apparently left little impression on the committee, which immediately demanded more specific details and names.

The approved resolution will be called up in the Senate some time this week, and Senate approval over some opposition was generally forecast.

Reports have been circulated that some farmers received benefit

U. S. Agents Study Wendel 'Confession'

Inquiries in Offing as State's G. O. P. Chiefs Assail Hoffman.

Governor Asks Bill for Board to Investigate Lindbergh Case.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A Staff Correspondent.

Trenton, N. J., April 4.—Tangled "Jersey justice" took a new turn tonight as the body of Richard Bruno Hauptmann was trundled away from State Prison.

Department of Justice agents entered the confused picture to check statements in the fantastic Wendel confession which delayed for 72 hours the German's death.

Several investigations were in the offing as impeachment talk, subdued for a while, again threatened the political career of Gov. Harold G. Hoffman.

Two Bureau of Investigation agents came here from Philadelphia to delve into the reputed confession of Paul H. Wendel, disbarred Trenton lawyer, who recanted his story.

The Federal men apparently entered the troubled case on the possibility that Federal kidnaping laws were violated in Wendel's alleged forcible removal from New York to New Jersey.

Parker Is Questioned.

The agents questioned Ellis Parker, Burlington County detective chief, brought into the mystery by Hoffman.

Parker was believed to have been asked about Wendel's story that he was clamped in an asylum and tortured into signing the confession he later repudiated.

This Jersey city, in a state of excitement since Hauptmann was electrocuted last night for the murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., remained in a hubbub today as developments came swiftly one after another.

A crowd of 500 persons stood by silently as a black funeral wagon rumbled out of the walled prison bearing Hauptmann's body.

It was headed for the Bronx in New York, where Mrs. Anna Hauptmann awaited it. She plans to have the body cremated and to scatter the ashes in a forest near his home in Germany.

From New York came word that William F. X. Geoghan, United States Attorney, would press an investigation into Wendel's charge he was abducted and held in a Brooklyn house.

Geoghan revealed two of his aids already have questioned Parker concerning Wendel's story, on which defense lawyers unsuccessfully pinned their hopes of gaining a second reprieve for Hauptmann.

William F. McGuinness and Francis A. Madden, assistants of Geoghan, were reported to have taken a statement from Mrs. Anna Bading, Parker's secretary.

They also questioned an unidentified attendant at the New Lisbon Home for the Feeble Minded, where Wendel said he was held until returned to New Jersey.

Twenty additional detectives were assigned by Lewis J. Valentine, New York police commissioner, to aid Geoghan.

So far most of the demands for Hoffman's impeachment have been confined to newspaper editorials, but his political opponents made no secret of their desire to have the Legislature remove him from office.

Trenton tonight was thinking not about Hauptmann, but about Hoffman, who championed the German until the end.

What will be the effect on Hoffman's political fortunes? That was the question being asked tonight.

Before he interfered in the Hauptmann case, Gov. Hoffman was regarded as one of the most promising younger Republicans in the country—potential Presidential timber, in fact.

His excuse for intervening was that it was "the most bungled case in police history."

Seeks to Set Up Board.

Gov. Hoffman today revealed that he had asked Assemblyman John M. Kerner, of Elizabeth, to introduce in the New Jersey Assembly Monday a bill creating a committee of three to investigate the Lindbergh case.

The committee would be directed to investigate "the trials and convictions of John Hughes Curtis

'United States' Of Europe Goal In French Plan

Proposal to Be Offered to League Would Eliminate Economic Barriers.

By the United Press.

Paris, April 4.—French officials worked tonight on an elaborate plan for stability and peace in Europe which would include the late Aristide Briand's proposal for a "United States" of Europe.

Under its inter-European tariff barriers will be abolished and the States would work together for the common welfare of all, instead of the present system of jealous competition and general suspicion.

The plan would embrace all of Europe and its acceptance depends on approval of most of the important nations. If Germany refuses, France probably will urge its adoption with Germany excluded. The alternative would be a series of alliances between France and other nations to protect her against Germany.

The plan will be submitted to the League of Nations as well as to the powers which signed the Locarno Treaty—Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany and Italy.

Great Britain has accepted "in principle" a French demand for a meeting of the Locarno powers, without Germany, in Paris "as soon as possible." France wanted the meeting held next week, but Britain asked that it be set for April 12, Easter Sunday.

However, after a meeting of the League Committee of 13 had been set at Geneva for Wednesday, the French suggested to Britain tonight that the Locarno conference be held in Geneva Thursday, since most of the powers' delegates will be there anyway. No immediate reply was received.

The French peace plan, prepared by Foreign Minister Pierre Etienne Flandin, will be approved by the cabinet Monday and circulated among the governments Tuesday.

Premier Albert Sarraut prepared to study the plan carefully tomorrow before its submission to the Cabinet. He said he is in accord with it on all points, but wishes to approve personally the wording of the final draft.

Propeller Cleaves Wing, Pilot Crashes to Death

Monterey Park, Calif., April 4 (AP).—Second Lieut. Browne Clement, of the Seventy-third Attack Squadron, from March Field, Army Air Base, plunged to his death in a freakish plane accident today.

Capt. Nathan B. Forrest, leader of a formation of 12 planes, said the propeller came off Clement's craft and sheared off the left wing.

Lieut. Clement, formerly of Thorndale, Tex., and a resident of Riverside, Calif., was a reserve officer.

PWA Investigates $2,500,000 Sewer Contracts in Arlington

The May, 1934, award for concrete pipes for the new $2,500,000 Arlington County sewer, now under construction, is being investigated by the PWA, The Washington Post learned yesterday.

The investigation is aimed at discovering possible collusion in the bidding of the four principal bidders for the contract. No bribery of county officials is suspected.

These four bidders were the Lock Joint Pipe Co., of New Jersey; the Concrete Pipe Products Co., of Richmond; the Mid-Atlantic Concrete Products Co., of Norfolk, and the Gray Concrete Products Co., of Hagerstown. The fifth and only other bidder, the Grove Concrete Products Co., bid on only about one-sixth of the items involved.

The Lock Joint and concrete companies were adjudged lowest bidders, each being lowest on about half of the items. By special arrangement with the county board, it was decided that both companies would form a new corporation to be known as the Arlington Concrete Pipe & Products Corporation to perform the entire job.

By merging the contracts, the cost of the pipes was brought down to $276,091, an estimated saving to the county of about $6,000.

In the actual formation of the new Arlington Concrete Co., public records reveal, the two low bidding companies took in the two high bidding companies. Elected president of the new corporation was John J. Johnson, an officer of the Mid-Atlantic Co., one of the high bidding concerns.

What PWA investigators are trying to discover is whether the arrangement by which these four companies joined to form the new

Addis Ababa, Raided by Air, Is Evacuated; Army Routed

City's Airport Attacked by Italian Planes; Fire Returned.

Guard Smashed; Selassie Fleeing

Il Duce Forecasts Complete Triumph, With End of War Near.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, April 4.—This ancient capital of the last unconquered Kingdom of Africa was evacuated today in expectation of a rain of bombs from the sky by Italian planes.

The populace was ordered out after five streamlined Italian combat planes flew low over the city, apparently mapping the ground for a later attack by Italy's powerful three-motored bombers.

The scouting planes dropped small bombs and used machine guns against the airport, wrecking two planes.

The terrified population fled, choking the roads in a mad scramble as they made for the hills, in accordance with instructions issued months ago by Emperor Haile Selassie in event of an air attack.

Many dragged their possessions with them. Foreigners took refuge in the legations, where there are bomb-proof shelters.

Emperor Fleeing.

Meanwhile, Italy's northern armies smashed the resistance of the Emperor's imperial bodyguard. The Emperor and his forces were said to be fleeing in the direction of Quoram, leaving thousands of dead on the battlefield.

In Rome, Premier Benito Mussolini indicated his belief that a complete Italian victory and the end of the war is not far off.

While the Ethiopian forces were being hammered back by the Italians, the League of Nations Council's committee of 13 was summoned to meet in Geneva next Wednesday to consider means of a peaceful settlement.

After the excitement in Addis Ababa died down and there appeared little danger of a bombing attack before tomorrow, many of the people straggled back into the city, but were prepared to decamp again the moment sirens and cannon shots herald the arrival of Italian planes.

The planes appeared about 7:30 a. m. and flew over the city for half an hour. The population swarmed into the streets. Three persons were wounded by wild shots. They included an Arab contractor who had been re-modeling the United States Legation.

City's Guns Open Fire.

The city's anti-aircraft guns also opened fire, but none of the planes appeared to have been hit.

The only attack made by the five silver-winged planes was on the airport. Two of the planes dived swiftly from 2,000 feet to within 100 feet of the ground.

They poured incendiary tracer bullets into the hangar, riddling it.

The galvanized roof of the hangar was full of holes. A United Press plane inside was undamaged, but two planes standing outside were set afire. One was destroyed, but the flames on the other were extinguished.

The radio station at the airport escaped damage.

In addition to the machine gun fire, the planes dropped six small bombs.

The dive of the two planes at the airport was so spectacular that they seemed to be crashing, but they leveled off at 100 feet from the ground and soared over the trees into the distance after the attack.

The fighters appeared against the

Europe's Press Bitter on Delay On Hauptmann

English Newspapers Lead in Assailing 'Cat and Mouse' 'Torture.'

By the Associated Press.

London, April 4.—American justice, as represented by the Hauptmann case, was subjected to columns of criticism in the English press today.

The Daily Telegraph expressed the consensus of criticsim when it said American authorities played "cat and mouse" with the Lindbergh baby-killer in delyaing his execution.

Lady Muriel Derek Jones wrote a letter to one newspaper in which she said: "Thank God! I live in a civilized country.

"I shall never understand why a country considering itself the last word in civilization can allow cruelty to be perpetrated under the cloak of law to the extent of the exquisite torture treatment of Hauptmann. * * *

"I should think every Christian man and woman would raise his voice in abhorrence of this so-called 'American justice.'"

Among the conservative newspapers, the Times confined its news story of Hauptmann's execution to two paragraphs, plus a brief resume of the case.

The Morning Post devoted a column to the news and history while the Daily Telegraph carried a half-column in addition to a summary of the outstanding dates in the case.

German Reports Brief.

Berlin, April 4 (AP).—The execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann was reported only briefly in Germany's newspapers today—and most of them relegated the story to inside pages.

The Tageblatt carried 100 words under a single-column headline. Other dailies used as much as half-a-column—including editorial comment.

The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung commented: "Whether the evidence was sufficient remains the affair of the American judges and the American feeling for justice.

"What is not understandable for us, however, is the disgusting hubbub, after his conviction, over the guilt, innocense, or complicity of Hauptmann."

Concerning the repeated extensions granted the condemned man, the paper added: "This game with life and death as stakes is unendurable from German legal and humanitarian viewpoints."

French Assail 'Torture.'

Paris, April 4 (AP).—The French press, which divided its front pages today between the execution of Hauptmann and European diplomatic activity, condemned the "torture by hope" of successive reprieves.

Andre Maurois, writing in Figaro, called the stays "judicial inquisition," saying that "an innocent or guilty man has the right to die only once."

The widow of Marshal Foch declared: "When a man is condemned there is nothing to do but execute him."

The Journal des Debats said editorially: "The German' Hoffman, Governor of New Jersey, was responsible for the delays, not American justice." It added that it considered Hoffman's actions "largely due to politics."

Case "Travesty" to Vienna.

Vienna, April 4 (AP).—To Vienna newspapers, one of which devoted its first three pages to the execution of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the case of the Lindbergh baby killer was a travesty of justice.

The leading Neue Freie Presse declared: "His fate was fulfilled after senseless torturing postponements. What has happened in America was a travesty of every conception of justice.

"One of the oldest points of common law among many peoples is that an execution, if delayed just before its fulfillment, should not take place. * * * One will long remember the Lindbergh kidnaping and its sad epilogue with shudders."

Die Stunde, in a column-long editorial, said: "The way in which they played with the life of this man was a world scandal. * * * It occupied for the American public the same position as a boxing match. This is one of the saddest chapters in American justice and one of the most frightful."

Reilly Says Trial Cost Him $3,500

Nyack, N. Y., April 4 (AP).—Edward C. Reilly testified today that the Flemington trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, at which he was chief of defense counsel, had cost him $3,500 in expense money advanced out of his own pocket.

At a hearing before Supreme Court Justice Mortimer B. Patterson, Reilly testified he had been impoverished by the unfavorable publicity of his wife's suit for separate maintenance, which caused his appearance today.

He said he had no practice now and produced an affidavit purporting to show that he was unable to pay his office rent.

His wife, who said she had been receiving $50 monthly payments from Reilly since she started the proceedings against him, testified her husband formerly had made annual voyages to the tropics and Europe, kept three motor cars, and had expensive quarters in a South Central Park apartment and in the Westchester Country Club at Harrison, N. Y.

She asked that the temporary payments be increased.

Reilly, who attracted attention at the Flemington trial by the fastidiousness of his attire, was dressed today in dark morning coat and pin-stripe trousers. A year ago Friday Mrs. Hauptmann dismissed him as her husband's counsel.

Justice Patterson took the case under advisement.

and Bruno Richard Hauptmann, all activities of the Governor of New Jersey, the attorney general, the superintendent of State police and members of their respective departments."

But tonight he is under the fire of his own political associates.

Former Representative Franklin W. Fort announced that he would oppose Gov. Hoffman as a delegate-at-large to the Republican National Convention in Cleveland next June. Should Fort win, it would be a terrific blow to Hoffman's prestige.

Fort made Hoffman's conduct in the case an issue, saying:

"When a governor makes a mockery of our courts and juries and drags his high office into the mire, I cannot remain silent."

Henry P. Dubois, vice president of the Associated Republicans of Bergen County, sent Gov. Hoffman the following telegram:

"Believing you to be a loyal American and in order, if possible, to protect the Republican Party from contamination from the ghastly situation which has arisen in the State of New Jersey, I urge you to immediately withdraw your candidacy as delegate-at-large to the Republican convention to be held in Cleveland on June 9."

Declines to Withdraw.

Gov. Hoffman, in a belligerent statement, announced that he certainly would not withdraw.

He said:

"Whenever it becomes necessary for me, as Governor of the State or as an individual, to stultify my conscience and to stop fighting for those things that I believe to be right, I will be glad to withdraw from a party that would require such a surrender of principle.

"I do not believe, however, that you represent either the wishes of my party, or the rank and file of the citizens of New Jersey. I have filed my petition as a candidate for delegate-at-large to the Republican National Convention, and I will stand on that candidacy if I only receive ten votes."

Some Republican leaders are fearful that Hoffman's actions in the Lindbergh kidnaping case not only will affect adversely his own political future, but also will hurt the G. O. P. in the Presidential election so far as New Jersey is concerned.

One influential Republican, who has been traveling about the State lately and ferreting into public reaction to Gov. Hoffman's atcivities, said today:

"The reaction has been terrific. Every place I have gone, and I have covered most of the State, the people are bitter, not only against the Governor, but against the Republican leadership."

Paper Raises Questions

The Trenton Times, which has been demanding that Gov. Hoffman be impeached, suggested that the investigators seek the answer to these questions:

"Who has been supplying the money with which the Governor's "investigation" was conducted?

"Why was Paul H. Wendel kept in confinement for more than a month and his 'confession' withheld until the last minute?

"Was there a deliberate conspiracy on the part of high officials to defeat the ends of justice by trickery?

"For what reason did the Governor persistently adopt the viewpoint of the defense counsel and spurn that of the duly constituted authorities?

"What political objectives and aspirations were responsible for the sordid agitation of recent months?"

The name of New Jersey, The Times said, "has been dragged into the mire of utter disgrace as a result of the unseemly conduct of men who should be concerned with maintenance of the highest civic and moral standards."

Gov. Hoffman today directed Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of New Jersey State Police, to recommend to him the names of the persons entitled to the $25,000 reward offered four years ago by the New Jersey Legislature for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of the Lindbergh baby.

Many Mentioned.

Among the persons who have been mentioned as possible participants in the reward are Walter Lyle and John Lyons, the two young gasoline attendants who, on September 15, 1934, received the $10 Lindbergh ransom note from Hauptmann at a station on 127th street, near Lexington avenue, in payment for 5 gallons of gasoline; the receiving teller who "spotted" the note; "Joe" Perrone, the Bronx taxi-driver, who identified Hauptmann as the man who April 2 had given him a dollar to deliver the last of the ransom notes to Dr. John F. "Jafsie" Condon's home at 2974 Decatur avenue the Bronx, and the three men who swore at the trial that they had seen Hauptmann in New Jersey near Hopewell; C. B. Rossiter, 85-year-old Amandus Hockmuth, and Willard Whited, Lambertville lumberman.

Even though the death of Hauptmann has deflated this city and left it deserted in the throes of the reaction after the terrific intensity of the last few days' events, it has not robbed the case of its last climatic paradox.

While Hauptmann's body, in its cheap pine box, is being sped across the New Jersey flats to a funeral home in the Bronx, for services on Monday and immediate cremation, there is a formal complaint sworn to by Anna Schoeffler Hauptmann charging the abduction and murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., against Paul H. Wendel, disbarred Trenton attorney.

Served as Detainer.

Mrs. Hauptmann swore to the complaint late yesterday afternoon before Justice of the Peace George Webster, in Flemington. It was taken immediately to the Mercer County Jail by Constable William Saunders and served on the warden of the county prison as a detainer against Wendel.

It was a desperate, last-minute move which C. Lloyd Fisher, Hauptmann's counsel, had taken to thwart the execution.

So that, convening on April 14—the second Tuesday of this month—the Hunterdon County grand jury will solemnly consider and as solemnly return "no bill" in the case of Paul H. Wendel, 11 days after another man had been executed after conviction on those identical charges.

To add the ultimate touch of cruel irony to that action, the grand jurors will convene in the very room in which for 11 hours on February 13, 1935, Hauptmann's jury met and on the first ballot voted his death in the electric chair.

Hauptmann's body, unscarred by the fierce current which raged through it in three 2,000-volt pulsations last night, was turned over to Elmer A. Kemper, a local undertaker, and taken to New York in a motor hearse of Henry Stolzensberger, a Bronx undertaker.

The funeral, which will be private, and attended only by about 30 immediate friends of Richard and Anna Hauptmann, will be held either at the funeral parlor or in a church not yet selected.

Under amendments to the law of 1907, establishing electrocution as the form of capital punishment in New Jersey, no public services and no religious services of any character may be held over the body of a man electrocuted by this State.

Immediately after the services, the body will be taken to a Queens crematorium.

Mrs. Hauptmann, following her heart-breaking collapse when informed of her husband's death, left Trenton by automobile and went directly to the three-room apartment in the Bronx, which she has occupied with her son, Mannfried. It is less than ten blocks from Dr. Condon's home, and approximately 2½ miles from the home in which she and her husband lived on Two-hundred and twenty-second street at the time of his arrest, September 19, 1934.

It is her intention to obtain immediate passage to Germany, and, in conformity with a last wish which Hauptmann is said to have conveyed, scatter his ashes in the heavy woods bordering the black Elbe, near his native Kamenz in Saxony, woods he roamed as a child.

"I'll take him back home, I'll take him back to Germany to his family," she cried. "The New Jersey murderers killed three of us. When they killed Richard they killed us all. There will be no Hauptmanns in a cage for the world to look at."

A part of the expenses of Hauptmann's funeral will be paid by a sum of "about $200," now deposited to his account in the prison treasury.

It was made up principally of $1 contributions, forwarded to him in the form of checks, by persons who thought the doomed man's autograph was worth $1.

Sleep Aids Wife Of Hauptmann During Ordeal

Baby Says, 'Mom, You're Crying;' Bruno's Mother Says He's Innocent.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—Sleep came to Anna Hauptmann late today to end temporarily the ordeals of waiting for the body of her husband to be brought to a New York funeral parlor from the Trenton prison.

Friends aided her to alight from an automobile and walk into her Bronx home, a few hundred feet from the campus of Fordham University.

Then she heard the voice of Manfred, her 2-year-old son: "Mom, you're crying."

Later, she slept while the baby was taken for an automobile ride by two young women, who said they were the daughters of the Rev. D. G. Werner, spiritual adviser to Hauptmann.

Requested Privacy.

Orrin Van Leuvan, manager of a Bronx funeral home, said that Mrs. Hauptmann had requested the "utmost privacy" in all funeral arrangements for her husband.

Friends of the widow said that Bruno Hauptmann's ashes eventually will be taken to Germany after cremation here.

Van Leuvan said he understood a Pittsburgh, Pa., sculptor, Ken Coffman, was flying here by plane from Los Angeles to make a death mask of Hauptmann.

Mother Says He's Innocent.

Kamenz, Germany, April 4 (U.P.).—Frau Paulina Hauptmann, red-eyed and shaken by uncontrollable fits of sobbing, rocked forlornly in her cottage today and insisted on the innocence of her favorite son, Bruno Richard.

The frail 70-year-old woman repeated over and over:

"My son is a martyr to misunderstanding. He did not commit this terrible crime."

"The Americans had to find a scapegoat on whom they could pin the blame," she said. "My son was such a good man. They should have known him. Then they would have been convinced of his innocence, just as I am convinced of it."

Power Companies Sue To Block Federal Jobs

Two Tennessee power companies filed suits in District of Columbia Supreme Court yesterday to block construction of municipal electric distribution systems in Memphis and Chattanooga with public works funds.

The romplainants were the Tennessee Electric Power Co., which serves Chattanooga, and the Memphis Power & Light Co., serving Memphis.

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat signed restraining orders in both cases and issued orders returnable April 9 that the defendants show cause why injunctions should not be issued.

Attorney Appeals Disbarment Ruling

Jesse C. Duke, an attorney of the 1300 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest, yesterday appealed to the Supreme Court against a disbarment order by the lower Federal courts of the District.

Duke asked the highest court to consider his case without payment of the usual fees, asserting he was without funds.

The disbarment order resulted from remarks and statements by Duke in a dispute regarding a criminal case here in which he was attorney.

Mother and Daughter Found Dead in Auto

South Bend, Ind., April 4 (AP).—Mrs. Evan Brown, 37, and her 13-year-old daughter, Margaret, were found dead today of carbon monoxide poisoning in the garage of their home. Mr. Brown found the bodies in the driver's seat of a light truck.

A. L. Knapp, coroner, said he is working on the theory that Mrs. Brown, despondent over ill health, induced the girl to accompany her to the garage by telling her they were going on a trip.

Hull Proclaims Tin Embargo For Ten Weeks

Export Ban on Scrap Metal Viewed as Step to Curb Japan's Buying.

By the Associated Press.

Beginning strict governmental regulation of scrap tin exports, Secretary Hull yesterday laid down a ten-weeks embargo against all shipments of that vital war material to foreign countries after April 16.

The move was regarded generally as aimed at Japan, one of the largest purchasers of scrap tin from this country. The Secretary of State acted under a recently enacted law designed to conserve the tin resources of the United States.

Advocates of the legislation had charged Japan was buying such large quantities of the metal here that it was seriously draining American tin resources and was causing disastrous consequences to the domestic detinning industry, which reconverts scrap tin into raw metal.

Wide Power Granted.

The act provides that no scrap tin may be exported after April 15 except under Government license, to be issued by the Munitions Control Board, headed by Secretary Hull. Wide discretionary authority was granted officials in determining the conditions under which such licenses might be issued.

In outlining the first regulatory step, the Secretary of State proclaimed yesterday that from April 16 until July 1 no licenses whatever would be granted. After the latter date, he said, they would be issued only to applicants who could meet conditions "consistent with the purposes of the act."

He made public an official form for export permit applications, requiring the applicants to state the specific purpose for which the material is required and the reason they wish to export it "rather than sell it in the United States."

Complete details concerning the identity of shippers, consigners and purchasers also must be included.

The United States is dependent upon foreign countries for most of its tin. As a result, the reconversion, or detinning, of scrap has assumed growing economic importance.

Market 'Destroyed.'

Referring to this in a House speech favoring the new law, Representative Faddis (Democrat), Pennsylvania, said the American detinning industry during the last few years had been "almost utterly destroyed because the Japanese have come into the market and have bid tin scrap up beyond the price which our detiners can afford to pay for this product."

In doing this, he said they achieved two purposes.

"One of their purposes is to destroy our detinning industry, which acts as a reserve in this nation in time of war," he said, "and the other is to secure a high grade steel which they use to amalgamate with the high silica ores which come from Manchukuo to make armor plate."

The art of house furnishing does not find acceptable expression in furniture of nondescript design.

Four centuries of masters provided a variety in design, establishing distinct and distinctive periods, upon which good taste draws. Each of these schools differ widely in detail, perhaps; but all unite in a common fidelity to quality—both in the character of craftsmanship and the meticulous care in the selection of the materials used in construction.

Such are the authentic masterpieces, and in their reproduction the Sloane Company of Mastercraftsmen adhers religiously, perpetuating the fame of the immortals.

Even as colors clash, so can incompatible periods of design create inharmony of effect. Surely consistency is a jeweled characteristic in furnishing as well as in temperament.

And it is so easy to be correct. Here you will find featured the famous schools of all the periods of the past four centuries, and the modern of today—presented in consistent environment.

As you plan, a member of our staff will gladly lend cooperating suggestions—offering practical demonstrations that will preclude guesswork and reduce your problem to a fine art—successfully achieved—keeping in mind that Sloane's, while

Report on Lift Is 'Whitewash,' Scott Charges

House Member Believes Inspection, Not Code, Needs Revision.

The report of District elevator inspectors on the fatal accident of 13-year-old Harvey Crowell "appears to be a whitewash," Representative Scott (liberal Democrat), of California, declared yesterday. He expressed the belief that the elevator inspection, rather than the elevator code, is "in need of revision."

Scott, who was one of the members in the House elevator that fell on the opening day of the present session, said the inspectors apparently had attempted to "befog the issue" by "creating a semiautomatic push button elevator" at the apartment house at 7611 Georgia avenue.

"The elevator inspectors who approved the plans and installation of the elevator where Harvey Crowell was killed are guilty of approving a violation of the District code no matter what they call the type of elevator installed there," Scott said.

Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, who has supervision over the elevator and other inspection services of the District, refused yesterday to comment on the published criticism by Representative Scott.

"I have no comment to make," Col. Sultan said. "I have not seen the statement."

Informed of the gist of the statement, Col. Sultan still flatly refused to comment. A special committee has been appointed by the Commissioners, at the instance of Col. Sulton, to revise existing elevator regulations. The committee is composed of Capt. J. S. Bishop, jr., assistant engineer commissioner, chairman; Col. John W. Oehmann, building inspector; John A. Dickinson, Bureau of Standards, and Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel.

Prior to appointment of the committee Col. Sultan said his purpose was not to fix responsibility on any District inspector or other persons because of the death of young Crowell. He assumed, he said, the inspectors had acted in good faith and inasmuch as they were versed in the regulations he believed these should be changed and made so explicit there could be no question of more that one interpretation of their provisions.

No time limit has been fixed within which the committee is to report. Membership of the committee, however, was intentionally kept to a few persons so as to avoid the long discussions and compromises which always ensue in the effort to bring about agreement of a large group on such a technical subject as elevator regulations, it was said.

Officers' Lassoes Fail to Tame Steer

Perth Amboy, N. J., April 4 (AP).—Four polciemen were forced into cowboy roles on this city's main street today as a madly charging steer provided an exciting two hours.

Patrolman George Hoffman tried to capture the animal single-handed, but called for reinforcements after it had eluded him in a chase during which it ran into store doorways and smashed a store window.

Three other officers, armed with lassoes, joined the chase, which finally ended in a vacant lot. There the policemen surrounded the bellowing, pantnig beast and began tossing their loops.

The steer charged Hoffmah and, in scrambling to safety atop a wall, the officer fell and injured his knee. Until their patience and arms gave out, the policemen tossed their ropes at the steer. Then they resorted to a service revolver which proved more effective tha n nooses.

The animal escaped from a slaughter house two days ago and was not seen until today.

Bandits Take $340 From Liquor Store

Two armed bandits held up the Cavalier Hotel Liquor Shop at 3504 Fourteenth street northwest, shortly before last midnight and escaped with two pints of liquor and approximately $340 from the till. Louis Norman was in the store at the time.

One of the bandits showed a .45-caliber revolver. The other kept his hand in his pocket as if he had a gun.

They told Norman to keep his hands up for five minutes while they escaped in a waiting automobile.

The St. Vincent de Paul Society of the District is planning a card party to be held in the Hotel Willard at 8:15 Thursday evening, April 23, to finance the high school education of deserving boys leaving St. Joseph's Orphanage.

Cushwa's Run Angler Proves First Fish Tale

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., April 2.—Lloyd Sterner, Boonsboro fisherman, produced the first fish story of the season, and brought back the evidence.

Sterner was fishing in Cushwa's Run for trout late yesterday when a 10-inch speckled specimen took the bait. When he landed the fish, he found about 16 inches of an 18-inch watersnake protruding from the fish's mouth.

High water and little food apparently had caused the trout to try anything.

3 Ships Locked In Heavy Floes At Lake Erie

100 Imprisoned as Gale Drives Ice Into Shore at Conneaut, Ohio.

By the Associated Press.

Conneaut, Ohio, April 4.—Heavy Lake Erie floe ice held three steamships fast tonight and threatened to keep their crews, totaling about 100 men, imprisoned for a week.

The Leslie, Conneaut and Sierra, all coal carriers, were trapped as a northwesterly gale drove ice into the eastern waters of the lake Thursday and yesterday.

Since the boats sent no signals for aid, harbor men assumed all was well aboard each.

Capt. A. J. Wilson, of the Ashtabula Coast Guard station, said the craft would be hemmed in until a strong off-shore wind should carry the broad ice field farther into the lake. He asserted this may not occur for a week or more.

The expanse of ice Capt. Wilson estimated to be at least 15 miles long, reaching into the lake as far as the eye could see. Piled to heights of from 20 to 30 feet in places, the ice barrier prevented tugs from reaching the stranded vessels.

The Conneaut and Sierra are 2 miles west of the harbor and the Leslie a mile east.

The Leslie, imprisoned late Thursday, drifted precariously toward rocks yesterday, but a submerged reef prevented further movement of the ice floe today, holding the ship stationary. Wilson said the other boats were not in danger.

Memorials in Nude Starts Texas Row

Austin, Tex., April 4 (AP).—An art committee's selection of nude figures as models for a memorial to pioneer Texas women set the w ord sparks flying today.

A nude pioneer woman?

"Never," shouted the critics.

"Naturally we would not have a nude figure to represent a pioneer woman," explained James Chillman, jr., director of the Houston committee, "but we have no ob- Art Museum and member of the art jection to nudes as allegorical figures."

The advisory committee on art, whose selection is perturbing the State Board of Control, chose a group which includes a man, woman, half-grown youth and a baby.

"The man looks like a weight lifter," objected Claude Teer, Board of Control chairman. The woman's figure, he added, has merit.

Another official was even more frank. He said th man "looked like an ape."

A solution to the problem, which will hasten work on the $25,000 memorial, is believed in sight. The artist has indicated agreement to clothe the figures.

Card Players Lose $511 To Bandits in Holdup

New York, April 4 (AP).—Four men tonight held up a Broadway Bridge parlor, knotted and soaked in water the trousers of 20 men players and dpearted with $511. But their old swimming hole game of "chaw beef" failed in part.

As they fled down the stairs one of the victims hurled a chair through the window, attracting Patrolman John Larkin. Two men were arrested and two escaped after a pursuit along Riverside drive.

The officers found the score of card players sorting out their tangled trousers in the kitchen sink.

'Army Smashed, Selassie Flees; City Is Bombed

Addis Ababa Is Evacuated; Complete Victory Is Forecast by Il Duce.

clear blue sky so early in the morning that the city, half asleep, was taken by surprise. As rifles began to crack and anti-aircraft guns opened up, the natives scurried hither and thither through the streets.

It was announced here that Jijiga, near Harar, had again been bombed today. Details were lacking.

A high military source revealed that a group of the imperial guard had entered Makale, far north of the present Italian line, late yesterday after a brief fight.

It was believed to have been a flying night raid. It was known that some time ago, the Ethiopians raided Makale, but were driven out.

Selassie's Bodyguard Routed.

Asmara, Eritrea, April 4 (AP).—Italy's northern armies smashed the obstinate resistance of Emperor Haile Selassie's imperial bodyguard today.

Fascist headquarters said the Ethiopian defeat, in the second engagement which the bodyguard has undertaken in the last week, amounted almost to a decisive turn in the battle tide.

The Ethiopian forces were broken up and scattered in the direction of Quoram. Emperor Haile Selassie, himself, was said to be fleeing.

Italian officers said the Ethiopians put up an obstinate resistance against Italy's first army corps. They said the imperial guard gave the Alpine fighters a hard time on the difficult, mountainous terrain.

The Sabaudia division occupied the ridges east of Kessadzba with slight losses, forcing the Ethiopians to withdraw and were able to help the Alpine units with a flanking fire while the latter fought their determined way up the ridges on the south of the Mecam valley.

Once the ridges were occupied in the teeth of the desperate opposition, both divisions joined in attacking the enemy.

The Ethiopians held their position for a long time despite heavy losses, but finally retreated to the ridges of Addi Assel and Ghergi.

Complete Victory Forecast.

Rome, April 4 (U.P.).—Premier Benito Mussolini today indicated in a speech his belief that a complete Italian victory and the end of the war is not far off.

Military men here believed final defeat of the Ethiopians may be in sight. They saw the possibility that the converging Italian columns might trap the Emperor himself, entirely demolishing Ethiopian resistance and morale by his capture.

Today's air raid over Addis Ababa was expected to have a marked effect on Ethiopian courage.

The defeat at Lake Aschangi of Haile Selassie's imperial guard, which he led into battle in person, was proclaimed in a communique from Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italian commander in chief.

Lake Aschangi lies 250 miles north-northeast of the capital, and not far south of it starts the best road in the kingdom, leading directly to Addis Ababa.

League Council to Meet.

Geneva, April 4 (U.P.).—While the Ethiopian forces were being hammered mercilessly back by the Italians, the League Council's committee of 13 today was summoned for next Wednesday to consider means of a peaceful settlement.

The committee consists of the 14 members of the Council itself, minus Italy. The meeting was called by its chairman, Salvador de Madariaga, of Spain. He was supposed to have acted because of the wave of public indignation in Britain over the new delay while the Italians were alleged to be wiping out the Ethiopians with poison gas.

His decision was taken, despite desire not to negotiate until after Easter, April 12, when it offered to send a delegate with full powers. Committee members, however, felt they could not delay, but should meet at once to ascertain Italy's terms.

Ethiopia protested strongly to the League today against Italy's air raid on Addis Ababa. It charged flagrant violation of The Hague Convention of 1907 prohibiting bombardment of open (unfortified) towns.

The Ethiopian protest was addressed to all members of the League against an attack by "five Italian military aircraft."

"During the attack, numerous shots were fired from machine guns at a very low height," the protest said. "As the town is completely devoid of troops and without military defense . . . this hostile act constitutes an act of aggression against an open town and affords incontestable proof of the enemy's intention of bombarding it."

Grade Fatalities At 4-Year High

Despite the efforts of the railroads and various safety organizations to impress upon the public the necessity for exercising greater precaution in passing over highway-railroad grade crossings, more persons lost their lives in 1935 in accidents at grade crossings than in any year since 1931, according to complete reports for the year just received by the Safety Section of the Association of American Railroads and made public yesterday.

These reports showed that in 1935, 1,680 persons were killed in accidents at highway-railroad grade crossings. In 1934 fatalities resulting from such accidents totaled 1,554; in 1933, 1,511; in 1932, 1,525 and in 1931, 1,811. Persons injured in such accidents in 1935 totaled 4,658 or an increase of 358 compared with the preceding year. Accidents at highway-railroad grade crossings in 1935 totaled 3,933 compared with 3,728 in 1934.

P. U. C. Agrees To $3,000,000 Gas Bond Sale

Proceeds Would Meet Bank Loans and a Maturing Issue.

Approval of the Public Utilities Commission was given yesterday to the proposal of the Washington Gas Light Co. and its subsidiaries to sell $3,000,000 worth of 4½ per cent bonds to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. at par.

One-half of the proceeds are to be used to retire $1,500,000 6 per cent bonds maturing in October. The balance is to retire outstanding bank loans of $983,000 and to make capital additions to plant and equipment of the company.

Order of the commission approving the bond issue limited expenditure of the proceeds to those things. Out of the surplus moneys derived from the sale the company plans to purchase two new water gas generators for its east plant on the Anacostia River, east of the Navy Yard. They are expected to cost between $600,000 and $640,000.

Other improvements to increase productive capacity are planned by the company in the near future. Necessary funds may be borrowed from banks, or, if enacted soon enough, the pending gas-merger bill may permit sale of additional securities.

The new bond issue is to be retired in 20 years. Under the mortgage the company is to take up not less than $60,000 worth in each of the first two years and not less than $160,000 worth in each succeeding year. It may demand redemption of a larger amount at a decreasing premium, ranging from a maximum of 107 down to par 18 years from date of issue. Some changes were suggested by the commission n the mortgage agreement, including changing language which might have prevented payment of dividends on any additional stock issued while the bonds were outstanding.

Old Scottish Tragedy Is Basis Of Suit Before Supreme Court

Two Writers Seek Damages From Film Company, Alleging It Used Copyrighted Play on Sweetheart Poisoning to Make "Letty Lynton."

By the Associated Press.

The story of a "beautiful and extraordinary passionate" girl and her tragic affair with a "singing and guitar-playing lady killer" came before the Supreme Court yesterday in a copyright suit.

The Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and several affiliates asked the nine justices to find that the movie they produced from the tragedy did not violate a copyrighted play by Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayre Barnes, based on the same facts.

The authors already have won damages in the lower courts and have sued one New York picture house for $21,000 damages, plus attorneys' fees. This was based on 84 showings of the motion picture at $250 each. The Supreme Court was told it had been exhibited in 8,000 theaters.

Both the play and the movie, Metro-Goldwin said, were based on a sensational trial in Scotland in 1857 when a beautiful Scotch girl was acquitted of poisoning her lover.

Intimate details of this were included in a series of "notable British trials" published in 1927. This account was admitted as the basis of the copyrighted play by Sheldon and Barnes, which Will Hays, movie czar, declined to let be made into a movie.

A British novelist, Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, wrote a novel also based on the 1927 trial volume. Metro-Goldwyn purchased the movie rights of the novel and studio writers shaped it into the movie "Letty Lynton."

The movie version was said to have eliminated "salacious" and objectionable scenes that caused Hays to ban the copyrighted play.

Detailed differences in the plots, characters and "emotional results" between the trial, play, novel and movie—all dealing with the same facts—were set out in the Metro-Goldwyn brief filed with the court.

The movie company also said that certain "scenes, dramatic incidents, and devices" that had proved popular with the public in "Mr. Wu," "Four Walls," and "Our Dancing Daughters,"—previous pictures it had produced—were incorporated in "Letty Lynton."

It listed the titles of hundreds of motion pictures, which, the Supreme Court was told, were based on similar sources that were the "public domain of literary, or dramatic material."

For instance, the justices were told "Abraham Lincoln" had been the basis for five movies and 23 plays; "Oliver Twist," four movies and seven plays, and "Scarlet Letter," four movies and 21 plays.

Witnesses Excused From Ritter Case

By the Associated Press.

Prosecution and defense in the impeachment proceedings against Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of Florida, yesterday excused 29 witnesses from appearing in the trial, to start in the Senate tomorrow. The action was a result of the Senate's elimination from article 7 of the impeachment of charges that the judge acted improperly in power and banking cases tried before him.

Among the witnesses excused today was Charles A. Russell, of this city, special counsel for the city of Miami in fighting efforts by the Florida Power & Light to enjoin the city from enforcing an electric rate reduction ordinance.

Denying he was the "star witness" of the prosecution in the impeachment case against Ritter, as claimed by defense counsel, Russell said yesterday he had "nothing whatever to do" with bringing the impeachment.

He said his sole activity was in trying to get Ritter disqualified from sitting in the power case on the ground he was "prejudiced." He said he had talked with no one about the impeachment.

Miss Perkins Denies Charge She Is an Alien

Answers 'Whispers' by Asserting She Was Born in Boston.

By the Associated Press.

Two letters which Secretary Perkins said were meant to reply to a political "whispering campaign" were made public last night by the Labor Department.

In the letters, Miss Perkins said she was born in Boston on April 10, 1882, of New England parentage and that her husband, Paul Wilson, of New York, also was American born.

She said there were no Jews in her ancestry.

"If I were a Jew I would make no secret of it," she said. "On the contrary, I would be proud to acknowledge it."

One of the letters went to Mrs. W. MacMillan, of New York City, who had asked the Labor Department chief whether rumors that she was a foreign-born Jewess were true.

After telling how her ancestors had lived in various parts of New England since the seventeenth century, Miss Perkins said:

"I have written you at length, my dear Mrs. MacMillan, because a number of similar letters of inquiry in recent weeks had led me to the conclusion that some rumor intended to be malicious is in circulation and that for the ease of mind of all interested, I should not ignore it.

Political Purpose.

"The purpose, although obscure, appears to be political, as those who are circulating it do not know me and therefore can have no personal ill-will toward me.

"The utter un-Americanism of such a whispering campaign, the appeal to racial prejudice and the attempt at political propaganda by unworthy innuendo must be repugnant to all honorable men and women.

"I am sorry that you should have been troubled by this un-American type of propaganda, but am much gratified at your courteous and kind inquiry. I have answered you at length in order that you may tell the truth to any friend who, as you say, has raised the question with you."

She said the settlers on the Perkins side was John Perkins, who came to America in 1630, took up land in Ipswich, Mass., and that her mother's family came from old New England settlers who arrived in the middle of the seventeenth century. She added that both lines were English and Scotch.

The second letter went to Charles F. Woods, of Riverside, Calif., who had sent the Secretary a copy of a bulletin he said had been circulated by the Associated Farmers of Riverside County.

"Authentic" Information.

This bulletin was headed:

"According to information received and believed to be authentic and reliable, 'Miss Frances Perkins,' Secretary of Labor, admits having been married to Paul Wilson in Boston, Mass., in February, 1910, and living in Newton, Mass., at that time. The only marriage on record at that place and for that time is the following certified copy on file."

The bulletin printed a copy of a marriage license issued to Paul Wilson and Matilda Wutzki in West Newton, Mass.

The birth place of both the bride and bridegroom was given as Russia.

In reply, Miss Perkins said:

"I was not married to Paul Wilson in Massachusetts in February, 1910, and I never resided in Newton, Mass., in my life. The marriage certificate of a Paul Wilson and a Matilda Wutzki is, of course, that of other individuals.

"The true facts are these: I was married to Paul Caldwell Wilson in Grace Church, New York City, by the Rev. Charles Slattery on September 26, 1913. It was my husband's only marriage and my only marriage."

Re-Zoning Plea Assures Span Aid From U. S.

Completion of Approach Will Be Speeded by Owners' Petitionfl

Completion of the Lee boulevard approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge was assured yesterday, when property owners along the boulevard in the vicinity of Hatfield agreed to petition the county board for re-zoning the area from business to residential "A."

The action removes the objections of the Federal authorities, who announced Thursday that Federal funds were being withheld for the completion of the highway because the property along the right of way had been re-zoned business.

In a letter sent yesterday to members of the county board, Attorney Thomas W. Philips said:

"I am instructed by my clients, Ashton C. Jones, sr., Ashton C. Jones, jr., W. M. Stone and L. R. Eakin, to notify you that they will take imediate steps to request officially that you re-zone to 'Residential A' their property which was recently zoned for 'Local Business.'

"These gentlemen believe that your action in zoning the property for business use was eminently proper and to the best interests of the taxpayers of this county. However, they understand that the United States Bureau of Public Roads has refused to comply with its agreement to furnish some of the funds necessary to complete this project because of the re-zoning mentioned, and it is their sincere desire to in no way interfere with the project, effecting, as it does, the interests of citizens of the county.

"They are taking this action solely as a result of this apparent interference in the local government of Arlington County by an agency of the Federal Government."

Mr. Philips stated that the request will be advertised this week in accordance with the law and that the matter should come before the local appeal board the later part of the month and final action taken by the county board early in May.

George M. Yeatman, when advised of the request, said: "I have conferred with W. E. A. McShea and W. P. Ames, the two other members of the board which voted with me to rezone the property in question to local business and will be pleased to comply with the request of the owners to re-zone back to "residential A," thus voting with Mrs. Elizabeth Magruder and F. F. Chew, the two members of the board who opposed us, thus making the action unanimous."

Refusing to accept a strip of the triangle dividing North Hartford and North Highland street in Clarendon as settlement of the controversy over the ownership of North Hartford street, the county board in special session yesterday unanimously voted to settle the question of ownership of the road in court.

Robert W. Gaines, owner of the property, offered to give the county a strip of the triangle amounting to 491.5 square feet, with the understanding that the section of North Hartford street in question become a part of the property which he claims to have purchased. The board refusing to accept the offer, he informed it he would demand a payment of $5 a square foot for the entire triangle.

It was pointed out that the strip of the triangle offered by Gaines to widen North Highland street would in no way relieve traffic conditions at that point.

Residents strongly protested closing that section of the street.

Sheriff Howard B. Fields informed the board that he was opposed to the closing of any street in the county. What is needed most, he said, is the widening of all county roads.

Bloc Opposing War In '17 to Be Feted

Members of Congress who voted against United States participation in the World War will be honored again at a ceremony in Statuary Hall at the Capitol tomorrow morning at 0 o'clock.

Norris, Knutson and Lundeen were among the 56 members of both houses who voted against American entry into the war. The ceremony is to be sponsored by the National Council for the Prevention of War.

The Navy's new 17,000-ton aircraft carrier is pictured sliding down the ways, after being christened by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. Built at a cost of $19,000,000, it becomes the first ship launched in the Roosevelt naval construction program.

'Vague' Tax Details Assailed

tax on corporate earnings based on amounts retained for reserves and a flat 90 per cent "windfall" tax on refunded processing taxes.

Chamber Sees Difficulties.

Despite a broad cross-section of business opposition, it was reported that the committee will insist on the main outlines of its plan, with possibly some favored treatment for corporations carrying large debts. At least one Democrat on the committee, Representative John D. Dingell, of Michigan, will seek moderation of the "windfall" tax on packing houses showing losses, and who claim they may be forced out of business by the high levy. He may suggest a 75 per cent tax.

A discussion of the Government's finances is slated tomorrow, with Budget Director Daniel Bell, and Treasury General Counsel Herman Oliphant, before the committee.

The Chamber of Commerce yesterday in its Washington review of National business affairs, saw "an amazingly large number of practical difficulties in trying to translate the President's tax theories ihto concrete legislation.'

Demand Detailed Bill.

"Congress has labored with the President's proposals for more than a month, but, as yet, has not been able to produce a definite plan," the chamber stated.

"Only a rough outline in the form of a report from the House Ways and Means sub-committee has come forward. This sketchy document is now the basis of committee hearings. Committee witnesses are restricted in their testimony to the tentative proposals in the report.

"In these circumstances, some business representatives, quite naturally, have been reluctant to appear before the House Committee. They hold that a detailed bill should be first drafted, giving ample time for study and analysis. Their attitude is that generalizations on the revolutionary tax proposals would merely add to the confusion and misunderstanding already existing, even among Congressmen themselves.

"Consequently, some business spokesmen may postpone their presentations until the Senate Finance Committee begins hearings, when, it is hoped, a concrete plan will be available."

Misuse of Power Seen.

The chamber's review called attention to business testimony at the hearings that the proposed corporate earnings tax would retard recovery and re-employment; wouid work a severe hardship on corporations with little or no accumulated surplus; would penalize prudent and thrifty management; and would "misuse" the taxing power to enforce economic changes.

"The question, therefore, troubling many business men," said the chamber, "is why the Administration insists on discarding a tried and proven corporate tax system and substituting in its place a system, that, at best, would be uncertain in yield and complicated in administration."

The chamber said that "what was described by the President as a simplified tax program becomes more and more complicated and involved as the legislative draftsmen struggle to write the proposals into definite tax schedules."

Appearance of Budget Director Bell and Treasury General Counsel Oliphant before the committee tomorrow was requested by Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member, and assent was given by Internal Revenue Commissioner Guy T. Helvering.

Denies There Is a Feud.

Committee Democrats asked Treadway if he was seeking to renew his "feud" with Bell, but Treadway denied there was a "feud." He said he wanted to question these witnesses on "Government finances."

"I simply want them to attest to the accuracy of yield estimates ($799,000,000) and to what affect the bill will have on business," he said.

Witnesses appearing before the committee yesterday included Alden A. Potter, of Bethesda, Md., who said he questioned "the political sincerity of the Administration in the tax bill," and advanced various economic theories of his own.

Henry Belz, of the Belz Provision Co., of St. Louis, reiterated testimony advanced by several small packers that the Administration's proposed 90 per cent "windfall" tax would force them to liquidate and said most of them would have been bankrupt already if AAA had not been invalidated.

Says Packers Bore Tax.

Belz argued that most of the packers had absorbed the pork processing tax and not passed it on.

"If the 'windfall' tax is levied," he said, "I don't know of one small packer in St. Louis who will not be in the hands of the Government."

Neal Bassett, of the Accident & Casualty Insurance Co., of Switzerland, asked that foreign insurance companies be accorded the same low rates as those offered American insurance companies and banks, while Allen Cornelius, of Nashville, Tenn., represented the case of 21 processed flour millers. Cornelius asked lowering of the "windfall" tax to 85 or 80 per cent and changes in the proposed stock tax refund.

Doubt Processing Taxes.

If hearings are concluded tomorrow, the committee will pass the balance of the week drafting tax proposals in definite bill form and have them ready for House consideration by the following Tuesday, Chairman Doughton said.

Doughton expressed doubt that processing taxes, proposed by the President, and already sidetracked by the House committee, will be reconsidered by the group. Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, who hopes to get hearings under way by April 13, plans to "consider" the President's recommendation for $221,000,000 in processing taxes. A number of Senate Republicans and Democrats, however, are predicting they will not be accepted by the Senate.

Estate of F. L. Glaize Bequeathed to Widow

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., April 4.—The will of the late Fred L. Glaize, sr., Winchester business man and president of the city council, was admitted to record here this week. It disposes of one of the largest estates in northern Virginia, and directs that Mrs. Katie Boyd Glaize, his widow, be given all the property, real and personal, for the duration of her life. The property then is to pass to two sons.

Navy Plane Carrier Launched

and the shouts of the thousands who jammed the sprawling yards of the shipbuilding company, the newly christened ship splashed stern-first into the water.

Sped by momentum from the journey down the ways, she rode far out into the James, where waiting tugboats jockeyed her into position alongside the outfitting pier. There her machinery, guns and other appointments will be installed to fit her for commissioning. That will require about six months.

Party Guests of Builders.

Following the ceremony, the launching party was taken on a tour of the Mariners' Museum and then were guests of the shipbuilding company at a buffet luncheon at the James River Country Club.

Should the Yorktown, when outfitted and placed in service, be called into action, her planes would swarm into the air from catapulting machines capable of developing the 120,000 horsepower necessary to propel aircraft from the ship as she moves at her rated speed of 34 knots. Returning, they would alight on a deck nearly 2 acres in extent. The ship is 810 feet long and 92 feet wide. Her weight is about 17,000 tons.

The Yorktown would largely rely on her planes—mostly bombers—for her own defense. Her armor plate is light and she carries only machine guns, anti-aircraft cannon and guns capable of sinking small surface craft.

The Yorktown is the second aircraft carrier to be constructed as such. The first was the Ranger, somewhat smaller, launched on February 25, 1933. The Navy has three others of the same type, but they were converted from colliers and battle cruisers.

A number of high Navy officials, members of Congress and other dignitaries attended the launching ceremonies. Groups of students from Georgia Tech and the University of Pennsylvania were among the spectators.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who flew here yesterday, returned by plane to Washington this afternoon.

Roman Holy Week Quietest in Years

Vatican City, April 4 (AP).—The emptiest Holy Week Rome has seen for many decades begins tomorrow when Pope Pius receives the decorated palms from the Bresca family of San Remo. They have supplied the Pontiff's palms for the Sunday before Easter since 1585.

The Easter period, which always has been a favorite time for tourists and pilgrims, finds the Eternal City with few visitors this year.

One of the reasons is that the Italians are busy with their war against Ethiopia and equally concerned with resisting the sanctions imposed by the League of Nations.

The troubled European situation, combined with Pope Pius' declining strength, have served to deprive the Roman Holy Week of its accustomed glory.

Simonds Memorial Services Is Today

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman will pronounce benediction. Music will be furnished by the Cathedral choir of men and boys.

Boy's Body Recovered.

Hagerstown, Md., April 4.—The body of George H. Porterfield, 13, son of Joseph Porterfield, was recovered tonight from a local water-filled quarry where the boy drowned tonight.

Crowds to See Blossom Show At Best Today

Ten Special Trains, Bus, Air and Auto Traffic to Bring Thousands.

ciation reported a formidable invasion of tourists. A cross-check of hotels showed that the majority of them are filled or will be filled today. From Washington Terminal came the information ten "cherry blossom specials" will unload their cargo of sightseeing excursionists at Union Station this morning.

Bus lines were glad to say business was brisk. The same went for the sightseeing coach and the bus charter people.

The influx would be still greater, they agreed, if the weather were warmer and if the recent flood had not led prospective tourists to believe this year's blossom display was washed out.

While hotels and transportation interests have made arrangements for unusually heavy business this week-end, their spokesmen expressed the opinion that patronage will be even greater next week-end—Easter. Parks officials said that, although the cherry blossoms will be at their best today and early this week, enough of a display will be left Easter Sunday to make the trip to West Potomac Park worthwhile.

The celebrated trees, Japan's token of friendship to the United States, proved again yesterday that they can "take it." Last month they were steeped so long in flood waters that many thought the delicate plants had been drowned. Early yesterday they underwent six hours of below freezing temperatures, garnished with snow flurries in a 28-mile wind, and emerged flushed but victorious.

Solicitous park officials triumphantly declared the flowers, daintily stepping out of their buds, were not injured one whit. The 70-odd members of the United States Park Police Department received their perennial orders to prepare for whatever can happen when thousands of men, women and children descend en masse upon the flower-framed Tidal Basin.

The "on to Washington" spirit that will take hold seriously today won't be relaxed until Easter is passed. Congressional attaches expect the year's largest gallery crowds in the House and Senate this week. The White House, Washington Monument, Smithsonian Institution and other tourist temples are similarly battening down for a grand rush.

The Greater National Capital Committee of the Washington Board of Trade estimates more than 200,000 sightseers will visit the city during the next 10 days. Miss Margaret Clore, information director, says she has answered approximately 2,500 inquiries regarding the blossoms.

Second Murder Charge Hinted Facing Myers

Death Penalty Rumored as Possible in Killing Involving Cleary.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Rockville, Md., April 4.—Ernest W. Myers, Baltimore gunman, found guilty yesterday of first degree murder in the "mistaken identity" slaying of Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route carrier, has not escaped the shadow of the gallows, despite the fact the jury which heard his trial returned a verdict which barred capital punishment.

As the sleek "mobsman" and racketeer paced his cell in Montgomery County Jail today, awaiting the automatic sentence which must be meted out under the decision of the venire, Lieut. Floyd Truscott, of the Washington police, revealed that Myers may be tried for another murder.

"Our case will be stronger than the Wilson case," said Truscott.

Detective Sergt. Earl Hartman, of the Wilson squad, concurred with Lieut. Truscott, but would say no more.

No Questioning.

Meanwhile, State's Attorney James H. Pugh, who successfully prosecuted Myers, denied late today that he will allow the prisoner to be questioned by Baltimore detectives in connection with the murder of Charles Gaither, No. 1 Baltimore gambler and racketeer, "taken for a ride and slain" a week ago today.

Pugh said the same attitude will be taken toward attempts to question Cleary or Dewey Jenkins, small-time gambler and informer, held as a material witness and for conspiracy in the Wilson murder case.

"Myers is a Federal prisoner," said Pugh emphatically.

U. S. Prisoner.

"He has appealed his conviction. He remains a Federal prisoner until he is sentenced. Cleary and Jenkins are Federal prisoners also."

The cell of Myers is atop the courthouse here, at the opposite end of the jail corridor from the cell of Cleary, whose testimony was used to convict him. The two are out of earshot of one another.

Gaither's slaying, according to underworld tales in Baltimore, was because he gambled away a part of the defense money which was raised to save Albert Sutton and Albert McDermott, alias James (Slim) Dunn.

Police are working on the theory that Gaither was entrusted with some money to be used in the cases, which are to be tried in Cumberland April 13.

He got into a dice game, police believe, and before the ivory cubes had stopped dancing disastrously across the table, he had lost the funds. He then tried frantically to raise funds to compensate for his losses, but could not.

The ride, ace homicide men say, was the result.

Killing by Proxy.

They do not, of course, see any actual connection between Myers, Cleary, Jenkins, McDermott and Sutton and the killing, for the five have been prisoners of the law for many months. The belief is that underworld pals of theirs did the job in Baltimore. The killing came at the height of the lottery racket war in the Maryland metropolis.

Thirty-two defendants, 26 of them policemen, are to appear in criminal court in Baltimore a week from today for arraignments on "numbers racket" conspiracy charges, growing out of heated gambling feuds.

Special precautions now are being taken to protect Cleary, "the man behind the mask," from gangland's swift vengeance. Armed county policemen patrol the courthouse.

Meanwhile, it was learned tonight that McDermott and Sutton have promised to make Cleary "burn with them" if he testifies against them in Cumberland.

"Wait till I get on that stand," Sutton is reported to have said in his cell at District Jail.

"I'll tell what I know about Cleary, which is plenty. If we burn, he'll burn with us."

Roosevelt Due To Disembark Early in Week

Sun-Tanned President Gets Mails, Catches Two Bonefish.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., April 4.—Well tanned and refreshed by two weeks on the open seas of this southern clime, President Roosevelt turned thoughts tonight to a return ashore and possibly to the busy days ahead in this campaign year.

His ship, the U. S. S. Potomac, lay within striking distance of the United States coast line and there were indications the President was preparing for a debarkation early next week.

Reports from him have indicated one of the most pleasurable of these annual cruises, with fishing luck exceptionally good and the weather almost ideal.

The President moved today to Southwest Point, New Providence Island, farther north, but the wind was too strong during most of the day for fishing.

He sent the following message to Marvin H. McIntyre, a secretary:

"Caught two bonefish and other varieties yesterday at Middle Bight. Moved this morning to Southwest Point, New Providence. Wind too strong for fishing at present, but may moderate in late afternoon."

Already some of the work ahead has been tackled by Mr. Roosevelt. Naval planes brought to him the latest business and mail from the White House.

The anchorage of the Potomac in the last 24 hours has been at Middle Bight, Andros Island, about 250 miles off shore from here.

The President has indicated a desire to visit briefly at his Warm Springs, Ga., home on the return to Washington, possibly for a day.

Christ Child Group Selects Officers

Mary V. Merrick, founder of the Washington Christ Child Society, will be its president for another year, the board announced yesterday following the election.

New officers chosen with Miss Merrick are: Mrs. Arthur Mullen, Mrs. James A. Emery and Mrs. D. C. Stapleton, first, second and third vice presidents, respectively; Mrs. Charles P. Neill, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Robert Cahill, assistant secretary; Miss Borredell Gower, recording secretary; Mrs. Charles Semmes, treasurer, and Mrs. Lewis Watkins, assistant treasurer.

Board members planned an annual meeting for the society April 28 at Christ Child headquarters. Dr. George C. Ruhland, director of the health department, will be principal speaker.

890,000 Offered For Morro Claims

Philadelphia, April 4 (AP).—Operators of the liner Morro Castle, sweptby fire off Asbury Park, N. J., with a loss of 125 lives, have offered to settle all claims out of court for a total of $890,000.

Counsel for a group of claimants disclosed the proposal today and announced a committee of lawyers in New York is considering a plan of settlement. The original offer was $14,284, the value of the charred hulk salvaged from the Jersey coast after the disaster on September 8, 1934.

Howard M. Long, who announced the offer, estimated the money would cover about 55 per cent of the provable claims.

Civil actions to recover damages, tentatively scheduled for trial in New York Federal Court May 4, may be continued until October, pending consideration of the settlement offer, Long said.

New Reich Airliner Completes Flight

Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, April 4 (U.P.).—Germany's giant new Zeppelin, Hindenburg, rested tonight in its hangar at Santa Cruz, 25 miles from Rio De Janeiro, after completing its maiden trans-Atlantic crossing.

The huge airship was moored safely to its mobile mast at 6:20 a. m. after a first attempt had proved unsuccessful. The mooring cable broke when the dirigible nosed gently against the mast and the giant of the air drifted away. It was necessary to secure it by hand. It was the only mishap of the flight.

Passengers unanimously praised the craft's behavior on the flight despite severe storms encountered en route. Commander Ernst A. Lehmann, in charge of the flight, described the new airship as "faster and more stable than the Graf Zeppelin." He explained the trip from Friedrichshafen took longer than the time set by the Graf on its South American flights because the Hindenburg was unable to cross the Belgian and French frontiers. Because of the international tension, the course of the ship was changed when it left Germany last Tuesday and its route took it across the Netherlands and over the English Channel.

G. O. P. Hopes Lie in Liberal, Avows Gannett

Nomination of Borah Will Assure Party Victory, Publisher Predicts.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, April 4.—Publisher Frank E. Gannett asserted today the Presidential hopes of the Republican Party lay in the selection of a liberal candidate and "to nominate Senator William E. Borah will be to elect him."

Gannett declared the administration of President Roosevelt had failed to bring recovery to industry, provide employment for idle millions and aid the farmer.

The Rochester, N. Y., publisher of a chain of newspapers, mentioned frequently as a vice presidential possibility, addressed Borah candidates for delegate and alternate in Ohio's May 12 primary and leaders of the Idaho Senator's Ohio campaign. Gannett is the second choice of Borah candidates in Ohio.

"Bear this in mind," Gannett cautioned. "If the Republican Party should name in Cleveland a candidate who can be tagged as the tool of any special interest or great corporation, this will play directly into Roosevelt's hands—and with such a candidate our party will go down to defeat.

"The Republican Party must name a liberal candidate, a man who occupies a position of independence and who has the courage to fight for the principles in which he believes. Such a man is Senator Borah. He has the qualifications that are needed in this crisis and to nominate him will be to elect him."

Wisconsin Active.

Milwaukee, April 4 (AP).—With Senator William E. Borah headed this way on his campaign tour, Wisconsin's convention delegate campaign suddenly came to life today.

Next Tuesday the State will elect 24 delegates to the Republican National Convention, with the choice between a full slate pledged to Borah and an an uninstructed group indorsed by the State organization —the "old guard," as Borah supporters describe it.

Also elected will be 24 delegates to the Democratic Convention, the large majority to be pledged to President Roosevelt. The full slate of organization-sponsored Democratic candidates is opposed in only a few cases.

Senator Borah, after losing out in the New York primary, headed for the Midwest in an attempt to capture the majority of both the Wisconsin and Illinois delegations. He speaks here Monday night and then goes to Illinois, where a primary choice will be made April 14 between him and Col. Frank Knox.

Prophesying victory, L. B. Nagler, secretary of the State's Borah-for-President Club, said: "Despite the efforts to stop him by the old party bosses, his (Borah's) popularity has grown steadily."

Michael G. Everlein, uninstructed Republican candidate for delegate-at-large, declared:

"To pledge oneself to Senator Borah without knowing who may be presented to the convention is like selecting the first girl you meet for a wife."

Knox Proposal.

Chicago, April 4 (U.P.).—Frank Knox, candidate for the Republican nomination for President, advocated a six-point program for the party tonight in an address at a "favorite son" rally. Senator William E. Borah is Knox's lone opponent in the Illinois primary April 14.

Knox, outspoken critic of the New Deal for two years, advocated: a balanced budget; re-establishment of a basis for confidence in the dollar; rigid economy in governmental expenditures; administration of relief through local authorities and dismissal of the Federal bureau which is trafficking in human misery for political purposes; farm prosperity by development of new uses for farm products and recapturing of foreign trade; and, rigid enforcement of antitrust laws to prevent monopoly.

"Only the Other Day," Knox said, "President Roosevelt addressed a message to the Congress asking for an appropriation of another billion dollars. In that message the businessmen were asked to co-operate with the Administration.

"Co-operate with what? Wasteful spending? Attacks upon the only remaining American body in Washington, the Supreme Court? With efforts to change the American system of government? With the political philanderings of Mr. Farley? With the Administration's attempts to socialize business and agriculture?"

Landon Gains Support.

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP).—Charles A. Sunderlin, attorney who had charge of the campaign for Senator William E. Borah in California, said today he would support Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for the Republican Presidential nomination.

He said his indorsement of Gov. Landon was a "personal" one and "had no connection" with Senator Borah. The Idaho Senator, on the last day for filing petitions in California, announced he would not enter the May primary.

Roosevelt Pledged.

Little Rock, Ark., April 4 (AP).—Arkansas Democrats today pledged the State's 18 votes in the national convention in Philadelphia next June to the renomination of President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner.

In a business-like session, the State committee, which selected the delegation, instructed for Roosevelt and Garner and unainmously adopted a resolution lauding their "matchless leadership."

Gov. J. Marion Futrell was named chairman of the 36 delegates who include Senator Joe T. Robinson, Democratic leader of the Senate, and Senator Hattie Caraway, chosen as a member of the delegation.

Cites Dictatorship.

The only chance the Republican party has to return to power in November is to nominate Senator William E. Borah for the Presidency, Carl G. Bachmann, chairman of the Borah-for-President committee, asserted in a broadcast tonight.

"To win, the Republican Party must nominate Senator Borah," he said. "Many people throughout the country confidently believe that the next President of the United States will be Borah or Roosevelt; that the greatest issue in the campaign will be the constitution or dictatorship. Without Borah we will have dictatorship."

Troops Guard Drillers for Oil On State Land

Oklahoma Governor Defies Ruling by Court and Zoning Law.

By the Associated Press.

Oklahoma City, April 4.—Protected by National Guardsmen, Gov. E. W. Marland transformed Oklahoma's capitol grounds into a budding oil field tonight, using his military powers to over-ride city zoning ordinances and a district court injunction.

Marland, one-time head of an oil company, grasped a shovel and himself started actual work on the first well, located just east of the executive mansion.

The cellar for the State-owned and State-drilled test will be completed Monday, he predicted. The next day, if his plans bear fruit, the first of a number of derricks will mushroom into the air in the capitol area, whch he has placed under martial law.

"I have directed State Senator Knox Garvin, a sergeant in the National Guard, to drive the well in the name of the State," Marland said. "We can't lose any time. Every day we wait costs the State a lot of oil."

Marland said at least three other wells were planned immediately.

The city-State "oil war" flared first when the city declined to permit the State to drill its own land, despite the fact private adjoining property was opened to production.

The injunction defied by Marland was one issued to Carl G. Lund, a taxpayer, by District Judge Lucius Babcock.

Music League Elects.

Charlottesville, Va., April 4.—The Music League of Albemarle has elected the following officers for the year: Dr. Albert G. A. Balz, president; Dr. Robert H. Webb, vice president; Mrs. Carroll Mason Sparrow, secretary; James S. Constantine, treasurer, and Howard J. Dutcher, jr., business manager.

contended by friends and foes alike here, gave the Indiana branch of that company a severe drubbing in the stripper oil fight several years ago and subsequently blocked a move on the part of the large oil companies to cut prices paid to producers by threatening to forbid the storage of any more oil above ground.

In this connection a recent editorial from the Tulsa (Okla.) World, a Democratic newspaper committed to support President Roosevelt, asserted that "hanging the Standard Oil on Landon sounds very much like a jackass braying down an empty barrel and mistaking the noise for facts and profundity."

Under the Landon leadership the Kansas Legislature passed an act requiring public utilities to pay for investigations made into their rate structures, valuation and operations by the State utility commission. It was the Governor's answer to the contention that the State regulatory body never had enough money to make adequate investigations.

He was the only Governor in the country—it is said here—who publicly indorsed Senator Hiram Johnson's bill to deny Federal district courts authority to review the findings of State regulatory bodies in rate-making cases.

Business Backs Him.

Yet many representatives of big business and of the utilities out in this section are enthusiastically for Landon's Presidential candidacy. The reason is that while he has undertaken to make them behave, he has never used them as whipping boys to enhance his ambitions or as a medium of publicity for his ideas.

An illustration is found in the controversy over the proposal to make the utilities pay the costs of State investigations into their affairs. The utility lobby came to Topeka prepared to fight the Governor's bill to the last ditch.

Gov. Landon prepared a special message to the Legislature, severely assailing certain utility practices, particularly evils developed by promoters of such companies. He sent for the utility representatives and laid before them copies of the message he proposed to send to the Legislature.

Several whistled, it is said, as they read the Governor's severe indictment. Finally they agreed not to oppose the Governor's bill, and Mr. Landon tore up the message without making it public. He won his objective, and having done so, cared not for the publicity which he lost.

These are aspects of Gov. Landon's career which are generally known around Kansas—and are responsible for his great popularity here—but which the East does not know, making that section fertile ground for vague accusations that he is the candidate of the "interests."

Sinclair Backing Denied.

One other story circulating in the East, which it is contended here is without an iota of truth in it, is that Harry Sinclair, of Teapot Dome fame, is financing the Landon Presidential campaign. Mr. Sinclair has not given—and has not been asked to contribute—a single cent to the Landon campaign fund, which does not total more than $8,000 so far.

Those who meet Gov. Landon invariably like him. He has a warm personality which draws people to him. Perhaps one reason he so quickly makes friends of those he meets is that he seems genuinely interested in them. His magnetic personality explains the enthusiasm for him of the many different-minded people who have met him. But it does not account for the enthusiasm now apparently sweeping Republicans the country over who have never seen him.

One explanation is that he is "the antithesis of President Roosevelt" and the logical choice of those who dislike or have tired of the President. But the statement is not wholly true. In many ways he is the opposite of the President, such as his caution in reaching conclusions, his abhorrence of indebtedness and his reluctance to assail men when there is a chance of winning them over to his side. But both have genial, warm personalities and both recognize the need for a new social conscience on the part of government.

After talking with Republicans in the Midwest it appears the real reason Gov. Landon has stirred so much enthusiasm is that he is regarded as the only available Republican who has a chance of beating President Roosevelt this year. Out here it is assumed that the East generally will be Republican this year—and that Republican success, if it is possible, depends on carrying several States west of the Mississippi River.

Gov. Landon, it is contended here by both Republicans and Democrats, is the only man with a chance of defeating President Roosevelt next fall in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma. In order to win, it is figured by Republican strategists, those States are absolutely necessary—and the Republicans deeply desire a winner this year.

Strike Accord Ends 8-Month Wrangle

Minneapolis, April 4 (AP).—Capital and Labor made peace in the Strutwear Knitting Co. strike today after eight months of bickering studded with violence, court suits, mobilization of the National Guard and censure of State and city officials.

In view of the settlement, approved by strikers today after acceptance last night by company officials, indications were the District court would dismiss a company application for an injunction preventing picketing, and permitting resumption of operations. Testimony in the hearing was completed last week and a ruling was expected soon.

Immediate reopening of the plant with reinstatement of all but eight former employes, without discrimination, by May 19, was agreed upon by the settlement.

Lobby Inquiry Is Facing Curb; Action Certain

Measure Drawn by Black Is Approved Second Time in Senate.

By the Associated Press.

Strong indications that the program of the Senate lobby investigation will be sharply curtailed arose last night after Senate action putting new impetus behind legislation to require the registration of lobbyists.

For the second time, the Senate approved a bill drawn by Chairman Black (Democra), Alabama, of the Lobby Committee, but this time in such form that the measure goes next to conference with representatives of the House, which, a week ago, passed a measure directed at the same general purpose.

The maneuver, engineered by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority leader, made the enactment of legislation at this session a certainty, and partially removed, at least in the minds of several members of the committee, the necessity for continuing the investigation.

It was made clear, however, that whether or not the inquiry goes on the committee will continue to fight the court move of William Randolph Hearst to obtain an injunction forbidding it to use telegrams exchanged between himself and his employes.

Regarded as Challenge.

In Black's opinion, the publisher's move constitutes a challenge to the authority of the Senate which should be settled as expeditiously as possible, lest the forthcoming investigation of campaign expenditures be hindered by similar suits.

Black, avoiding any open action to discontinue the investigation until the registration bill is in final form, prepared for a resumption of hearings on Tuesday, at which officials of the Crusaders, an anti-New Deal organization, are expected to testify.

The Liberty League holds a place on the inquiry's schedule, and it was expected any curtailment would not cut that organization from the list. Otherwise, sources close to the committee said, hearings probably would be confined principally to introduction of documentary evidence summarizing the hundreds of questionnaires on lobbying activities the committee sent to firms, organizations and individuals.

From this, the committee hopes to obtain a total of money spent by the public utilities industry last year in its unsuccessful fight to defeat the Wheele-Rayburn bill, legislating numerous power holding companies out of existence.

Disclosure Expected.

It also believes the questionnaires will disclose that a group of 20, or more, organizations devoted in some part to opposition to the New Deal are drawing their finances largely from a common list of big contributors.

The House bill calls for the registration of all persons, firms, or organizations, collecting, and expending, funds principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. The Black bill requires the registration of everyone, who, for hire, endeavors to influence legislation, or to influence the letting of Government contracts.

An effort on Friday to push the Senate bill through in the form of a substitute for the House measure, thereby insuring a conference, failed because Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, objected. He withdrew this objection yesterday, saying he had examined the two measures and found the Senate bill much to be preferred.

Scientist Off to Seek Rare Bird in Bolivia

New York, April 4 (AP).—Melbourne A. Carricker, of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Science, sailed today on the Santa Rita in quest of a giant tinamou.

For 20 years, he said, he has explored in South America and only once has he seen the tinamou, a bird, which he said was "as large as a turkey and as fast as a grouse."

"If it's the last thing I do for the academy," Carricker said, "I'm going to shoot one of them and bring it back."

He is bound for Bolivia.

Assailing Bill, Reynolds Halts Vote on Aliens

Senator Urges Own Plan to Cut Immigration to 15,300 a Year.

By the Associated Press.

An afternoon of conversation by Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, delayed action by the Senate yesterday on the Kerr-Coolidge criminal alien deportation bill.

Reynolds set out with the avowed desire "to talk to death" the bill and to advocate his own measure, which, in addition to expelling criminal aliens, would reduce immigration from 153,000 to 15,300 annually.

The Senate adjourned without acting on the measure. It will be laid aside tomorrow for the Ritter impeachment proceedings.

Reynolds called the Kerr-Coolidge proposal "un-American" and said Daniel W. MacCormack, immigration commissioner, and others in the Labor Department had given Congress "misleading" information on the status of criminal aliens now here.

"I want to make the people of the world respect our laws even if the people of America don't," he said, arguing that the Kerr-Coolidge bill would make immigration barriers more vulnerable.

He said the Labor Department had allowed some 2,862 aliens with criminal records to remain here and that MacCormack had given the House inaccurate information on the status of these persons.

Reynolds said one individual in this category was a deserter from the French army, had stolen an airplane, and had entered this country illegally on two occasions.

The Kerr-Coolidge bill would deport aliens convicted of violation of the narcotic laws, offenses of moral turpitude, the immigration laws or carrying concealed weapons. Discretion over certain deportables would be placed with a committee of representatives of the State, Justice and Labor Departments.

Reynolds' bill, besides reducing immigration and deporting criminals, would require the registration and fingerprinting of aliens now here.

corporation had been agreed to before the bids were entered.

The investigation was inspired in part, it was learned, because of the difference in prices quoted by the Arlington Concrete Co. on a later contract in which the identical sizes and type pipe were required. Determination of whether this difference was due to the smaller quantity of pipe required under the second contract or to the competition of outside bidders, is one of the aims of the investigation.

Second Contract Let.

The second contract for $4,460 was awarded to the Arlington County Concrete Co. on November 27, 1935. The prices quoted in this contract for identical sizes of pipe, as compared with the prices quoted in the first contract that was awarded May 16, 1934, and the quantities of pipe required, follow:

Six-inch—Twelve cents per foot for a 5,000-foot order to 13½ cents for 50,000 feet.

Eight-inch—Nineteen cents for 400 feet to 20½ cents for a 175,000-foot order.

Twelve-inch—Fifty cents for 200 feet to 58 cents for 35,000 feet.

Fifteen-inch—Fifty cents for 200 feet to 58 cents for 35,000 feet.

Eighteen-inch — Sixty-two cents for 600 feet to 80 cents for 25,000 feet.

Twenty-one-inch — Eigthy-seven cents for 2,000 feet to $1.14 for 6,000 feet.

Forty-two-inch—Three dollars and fifteen cents for 200 feet to $4.25 for 5,000 feet.

At PWA headquarters the fact that an investigation was being conducted into the concrete pipe awards was verified. Officials, however, said they had no comment to make pending outcome of the inquiry.

G. O. P. Hopes Lie in Liberal, Avows Gannett

Nomination of Borah Will Assure Party Victory, Publisher Predicts.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, April 4.—Publisher Frank E. Gannett asserted today the Presidential hopes of the Republican Party lay in the selection of a liberal candidate and "to nominate Senator William E. Borah will be to elect him."

Gannett declared the administration of President Roosevelt had failed to bring recovery to industry, provide employment for idle millions and aid the farmer.

The Rochester, N. Y., publisher of a chain of newspapers, mentioned frequently as a vice presidential possibility, addressed Borah candidates for delegate and alternate in Ohio's May 12 primary and leaders of the Idaho Senator's Ohio campaign. Gannett is the second choice of Borah candidates in Ohio.

"Bear this in mind," Gannett cautioned. "If the Republican Party should name in Cleveland a candidate who can be tagged as the tool of any special interest or great corporation, this will play directly into Roosevelt's hands—and with such a candidate our party will go down to defeat.

"The Republican Party must name a liberal candidate, a man who occupies a position of independence and who has the courage to fight for the principles in which he believes. Such a man is Senator Borah. He has the qualifications that are needed in this crisis and to nominate him will be to elect him."

Wisconsin Active.

Milwaukee, April 4 (AP).—With Senator William E. Borah headed this way on his campaign tour, Wisconsin's convention delegate campaign suddenly came to life today.

Next Tuesday the State will elect 24 delegates to the Republican National Convention, with the choice between a full slate pledged to Borah and an an uninstructed group indorsed by the State organization—the "old guard," as Borah supporters describe it.

Also elected will be 24 delegates to the Democratic Convention, the large majority to be pledged to President Roosevelt. The full slate of organization-sponsored Democratic candidates is opposed in only a few cases.

Senator Borah, after losing out in the New York primary, headed for the Midwest in an attempt to capture the majority of both the Wisconsin and Illinois delegations. He speaks here Monday night and then goes to Illinois, where a primary choice will be made April 14 between him and Col. Frank Knox.

Prophesying victory, L. B. Nagler, secretary of the State's Borah-for-President Club, said: "Despite the efforts to stop him by the old party bosses, his (Borah's) popularity has grown steadily."

Michael G. Everlein, uninstructed Republican candidate for delegate-at-large, declared:

"To pledge oneself to Senator Borah without knowing who may be presented to the convention is like selecting the first girl you meet for a wife."

Knox Proposal.

Chicago, April 4 (U.P.).—Frank Knox, candidate for the Republican nomination for President, advocated a six-point program for the party tonight in an address at a "favorite son" rally. Senator William E. Borah is Knox's lone opponent in the Illinois primary April 14.

Knox, outspoken critic of the New Deal for two years, advocated: a balanced budget; re-establishment of a basis for confidence in the dollar; rigid economy in governmental expenditures; administration of relief through local authorities and dismissal of the Federal bureau which is trafficking in human misery for political purposes; farm prosperity by development of new uses for farm products and recapturing of foreign trade; and, rigid enforcement of antitrust laws to prevent monopoly.

"Only the Other Day," Knox said, "President Roosevelt addressed a message to the Congress asking for an appropriation of another billion dollars. In that message the businessmen were asked to co-operate with the Administration.

"Co-operate with what? Wasteful spending? Attacks upon the only remaining American body in Washington, the Supreme Court? With efforts to change the American system of government? With the political philanderings of Mr. Farley? With the Administration's attempts to socialize business and agriculture?"

Landon Gains Support.

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP).—Charles A. Sunderlin, attorney who had charge of the campaign for Senator William E. Borah in California, said today he would support Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for the Republican Presidential nomination.

He said his indorsement of Gov. Landon was a "personal" one and "had no connection" with Senator Borah. The Idaho Senator, on the last day for filing petitions in California, announced he would not enter the May primary.

Roosevelt Pledged.

Little Rock, Ark., April 4 (AP).—Arkansas Democrats today pledged the State's 18 votes in the national convention in Philadelphia next June to the renomination of President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner.

In a businss-like session, the State committee, which selected the delegation, instructed for Roosevelt and Garner and unainmously adopted a resolution lauding their "matchless leadership."

Gov. J. Marion Futrell was named chairman of the 36 delegates who include Senator Joe T. Robinson, Democratic leader of the Senate, and Senator Hattie Caraway, chosen as a member of the delegation.

Cites Dictatorship.

The only chance the Republican party has to return to power in November is to nominate Senator William E. Borah for the Presidency, Carl G. Bachmann, chairman of the Borah-for-President committee, asserted in a broadcast tonight.

"To win, the Republican Party must nominate Senator Borah," he said. "Many people throughout the country confidently believe that the next President of the United States will be Borah or Roosevelt; that the greatest issue in the campaign will be the constitution or dictatorship. Without Borah we will have dictatorship."

Oklahoma Governor Defies Ruling by Court and Zoning Law.

By the Associated Press.

Oklahoma City, April 4.—Protected by National Guardsmen, Gov. E. W. Marland transformed Oklahoma's capitol grounds into a budding oil field tonight, using his military powers to over-ride city zoning ordinances and a district court injunction.

Marland, one-time head of an oil company, grasped a shovel and himself started actual work on the first well, located just east of the executive mansion.

The cellar for the State-owned and State-drilled test will be completed Monday, he predicted. The next day, if his plans bear fruit, the first of a number of derricks will mushroom into the air in the capitol area, which he has placed under martial law.

"I have directed State Senator Knox Garvin, a sergeant in the National Guard, to drive the well in the name of the State," Marland said. "We can't lose any time. Every day we wait costs the State a lot of oil."

Marland said at least three other wells were planned immediately.

The city-State "oil war" flared first when the city declined to permit the State to drill its own land, despite the fact private adjoining property was opened to production.

The injunction defied by Marland was one issued to Carl G. Lund, a taxpayer, by District Judge Lucius Babcock.

contended by friends and foes alike here, gave the Indiana branch of that company a severe drubbing in the stripper oil fight several years ago and subsequently blocked a move on the part of the large oil companies to cut prices paid to producers by threatening to forbid the storage of any more oil above ground.

In this connection a recent editorial from the Tulsa (Okla.) World, a Democratic newspaper committed to support President Roosevelt, asserted that "hanging the Standard Oil on Landon sounds very much like a jackass braying down an empty barrel and mistaking the noise for facts and profundity."

Under the Landon leadership the Kansas Legislature passed an act requiring public utilities to pay for investigations made into their rate structures, valuation and operations by the State utility commission. It was the Governor's answer to the contention that the State regulatory body never had enough money to make adequate investigations.

He was the only Governor in the country—it is said here—who publicly indorsed Senator Hiram Johnson's bill to deny Federal district courts authority to review the findings of State regulatory bodies in rate-making cases.

Business Backs Him.

Yet many representatives of big business and of the utilities out in this section are enthusiastically for Landon's Presidential candidacy. The reason is that while he has undertaken to make them behave, he has never used them as whipping boys to enhance his ambitions or as a medium of publicity for his ideas.

An illustration is found in the controversy over the proposal to make the utilities pay the costs of State investigations into their affairs. The utility lobby came to Topeka prepared to fight the Governor's bill to the last ditch.

Gov. Landon prepared a special message to the Legislature, severely assailing certain utility practices, particularly evils developed by promoters of such companies. He sent for the utility representatives and laid before them copies of the message he proposed to send to the Legislature.

Several whistled, it is said, as they read the Governor's severe indictment. Finally they agreed not to oppose the Governor's bill, and Mr. Landon tore up the message without making it public. He won his objective, and having done so, cared not for the publicity which he lost.

These are aspects of Gov. Landon's career which are generally known around Kansas—and are responsible for his great popularity here—but which the East does not know, making that section fertile ground for vague accusations that he is the candidate of the "interests."

Sinclair Backing Denied.

One other story circulating in the East, which it is contended here is without an iota of truth in it, is that Harry Sinclair, of Teapot Dome fame, is financing the Landon Presidential campaign. Mr. Sinclair has not given—and has not been asked to contribute—a single cent to the Landon campaign fund, which does not total more than $8,000 so far.

Those who meet Gov. Landon invariably like him. He has a warm personality which draws people to him. Perhaps one reason he so quickly makes friends of those he meets is that he seems genuinely interested in them. His magnetic personality explains the enthusiasm for him of the many different-minded people who have met him. But it does not account for the enthusiasm now apparently sweeping Republicans the country over who have never seen him.

One explanation is that he is "the antithesis of President Roosevelt" and the logical choice of those who dislike or have tired of the President. But the statement is not wholly true. In many ways he is the opposite of the President, such as his caution in reaching conclusions, his abhorrence of indebtedness and his reluctance to assail men when there is a chance of winning them over to his side. But both have genial, warm personalities and both recognize the need for a new social conscience on the part of government.

After talking with Republicans in the Midwest it appears the real reason Gov. Landon has stirred so much enthusiasm is that he is regarded as the only available Republican who has a chance of beating President Roosevelt this year. Out here it is assumed that the East generally will be Republican this year—and that Republican success, if it is possible, depends on carrying several States west of the Mississippi River.

Gov. Landon, it is contended here by both Republicans and Democrats, is the only man with a chance of defeating President Roosevelt next fall in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma. In order to win, it is figured by Republican strategists, those States are absolutely necessary—and the Republicans deeply desire a winner this year.

Strike Accord Ends 8-Month Wrangle

Minneapolis, April 4 (AP).—Capital and Labor made peace in the Strutwear Knitting Co. strike today after eight months of bickering studded with violence, court suits, mobilization of the National Guard and censure of State and city officials.

In view of the settlement, approved by strikers today after acceptance last night by company officials, indications were the District court would dismiss a company application for an injunction preventing picketing, and permitting resumption of operations. Testimony in the hearing was completed last week and a ruling was expected soon.

Immediate reopening of the plant with reinstatement of all but eight former employes, without discrimination, by May 19, was agreed upon by the settlement.

Lobby Inquiry Is Facing Curb; Action Certain

Measure Drawn by Black Is Approved Second Time in Senate.

By the Associated Press.

Strong indications that the program of the Senate lobby investigation will be sharply curtailed arose last night after Senate action putting new impetus behind legislation to require the registration of lobbyists.

For the second time, the Senate approved a bill drawn by Chairman Black (Democra), Alabama, of the Lobby Committee, but this time in such form that the measure goes next to conference with representatives of the House, which, a week ago, passed a measure directed at the same general purpose.

The maneuver, engineered by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority leader, made the enactment of legislation at this session a certainty, and partially removed, at least in the minds of several members of the committee, the necessity for continuing the investigation.

It was made clear, however, that whether or not the inquiry goes on the committee will continue to fight the court move of William Randolph Hearst to obtain an injunction forbidding it to use telegrams exchanged between himself and his employes.

Regarded as Challenge.

In Black's opinion, the publisher's move constitutes a challenge to the authority of the Senate which should be settled as expeditiously as possible, lest the forthcoming investigation of campaign expenditures be hindered by similar suits.

Black, avoiding any open action to discontinue the investigation until the registration bill is in final form, prepared for a resumption of hearings on Tuesday, at which officials of the Crusaders, an anti-New Deal organization, are expected to testify.

The Liberty League holds a place on the inquiry's schedule, and it was expected any curtailment would not cut that organization from the list. Otherwise, sources close to the committee said, hearings probably would be confined principally to introduction of documentary evidence summarizing the hundreds of questionnaires on lobbying activities the committee sent to firms, organizations and individuals.

From this, the committee hopes to obtain a total of money spent by the public utilities industry last year in its unsuccessful fight to defeat the Wheele-Rayburn bill, legislating numerous power holding companies out of existence.

Disclosure Expected.

It also believes the questionnaires will disclose that a group of 20, or more, organizations devoted in some part to opposition to the New Deal are drawing their finances largely from a common list of big contributors.

The House bill calls for the registration of all persons, firms, or organizations, collecting, and expending, funds principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. The Black bill requires the registration of everyone, who, for hire, endeavors to influence legislation, or to influence the letting of Government contracts.

An effort on Friday to push the Senate bill through in the form of a substitute for the House measure, thereby insuring a conference, failed because Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, objected. He withdrew this objection yesterday, saying he had examined the two measures and found the Senate bill much to be preferred.

Scientist Off to Seek Rare Bird in Bolivia

New York, April 4 (AP).—Melbourne A. Carricker, of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Science, sailed today on the Santa Rita in quest of a giant tinamou.

For 20 years, he said, he has explored in South America and only once has he seen the tinamou, a bird, which he said was "as large as a turkey and as fast as a grouse."

"If it's the last thing I do for the academy," Carricker said, "I'm going to shoot one of them and bring it back."

He is bound for Bolivia.

Assailing Bill, Reynolds Halts Vote on Aliens

Senator Urges Own Plan to Cut Immigration to 15,300 a Year.

By the Associated Press.

An afternoon of conversation by Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, delayed action by the Senate yesterday on the Kerr-Coolidge criminal alien deportation bill.

Reynolds set out with the avowed desire "to talk to death" the bill and to advocate his own measure, which, in addition to expelling criminal aliens, would reduce immigration from 153,000 to 15,300 annually.

The Senate adjourned without acting on the measure. It will be laid aside tomorrow for the Ritter impeachment proceedings.

Reynolds called the Kerr-Coolidge proposal "un-American" and said Daniel W. MacCormack, immigration commissioner, and others in the Labor Department had given Congress "misleading" information on the status of criminal aliens now here.

"I want to make the people of the world respect our laws even if the people of America don't," he said, arguing that the Kerr-Coolidge bill would make immigration barriers more vulnerable.

He said the Labor Department had allowed some 2,862 aliens with criminal records to remain here and that MacCormack had given the House inaccurate information on the status of these persons.

Reynolds said one individual in this category was a deserter from the French army, had stolen an airplane, and had entered this country illegally on two occasions.

The Kerr-Coolidge bill would deport aliens convicted of violation of the narcotic laws, offenses of moral turpitude, the immigration laws or carrying concealed weapons. Discretion over certain deportables would be placed with a committee of representatives of the State, Justice and Labor Departments.

Reynolds' bill, besides reducing immigration and deporting criminals, would require the registration and fingerprinting of aliens now here.

corporation had been agreed to before the bids were entered.

The investigation was inspired in part, it was learned, because of the difference in prices quoted by the Arlington Concrete Co. on a later contract in which the identical sizes and type pipe were required. Determination of whether this difference was due to the smaller quantity of pipe required under the second contract or to the competition of outside bidders, is one of the aims of the investigation.

Second Contract Let.

The second contract for $4,460 was awarded to the Arlington County Concrete Co. on November 27, 1935. The prices quoted in this contract for identical sizes of pipe, as compared with the prices quoted in the first contract that was awarded May 16, 1934, and the quantities of pipe required, follow:

Six-inch—Twelve cents per foot for a 5,000-foot order to 13½ cents for 50,000 feet.

Eight-inch—Nineteen cents for 400 feet to 20½ cents for a 175,000-foot order.

Twelve-inch—Fifty cents for 200 feet to 58 cents for 35,000 feet.

Fifteen-inch—Fifty cents for 200 feet to 58 cents for 35,000 feet.

Eighteen-inch — Sixty-two cents for 600 feet to 80 cents for 25,000 feet.

Twenty-one-inch — Eigthy-seven cents for 2,000 feet to $1.14 for 6,000 feet.

Forty - two - inch—Three dollars and fifteen cents for 200 feet to $4.25 for 5,000 feet.

At PWA headquarters the fact that an investigation was being conducted into the concrete pipe awards was verified. Officials, however, said they had no comment to make pending outcome of the inquiry.

Green Accords Labor Support To Wagner Bill

President Signs Measure to Continue FHA Home Loans.

Action on the Nation's housing problem, one of the most vital questions the Roosevelt Administration, appeared likely yesterday in the wake of the billion-dollar housing bill introduced Friday by Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York. Developments included:

1. Support of the American Federation of Labor for the Wagner bill was offered by William Green, A. F. of L. president.
2. President Roosevelt, aboard the U. S. S. Potomac off Miami, Fla., signed the bill extending for one year Title I of the Federal Housnig Act, authorizing loans for repair and modernization of homes.
3. FHA officials immediately began mailing out to lending institutions the regulations under which the Government will insure modernization loans.
4. New statistics showed that while the Nation as a whole has put $3,000,000 daily into new buildings and modernization of old ones in the year's first three months, two-thirds of the country's building trades workers have remained idle.

Green Praises Measure.

Labor Chief Green said that enactment of the Wagner bill would be "a crowning achievement for this Administration."

In lauding the bill, which would set up a permanent low-cost housing authority to advance $876,000,000 during the next four years in loans and grants to State nad municipal housing bodies, Green said:

"Labor has a double interest in finding some solution for the housing problem. We represent not only 1,000,000 building craftsmen, the majority of whom have been unemployed for six years, but also 4,000,000 wage earners and their families, many of whom are sorely in need of better homes to live in."

Indorsement Lacking.

Administration indorsement of the Wagner bill has not been forthcoming, and it is known that Senator Wagner delayed its introduction since the start of the session in hope that agreement could be reached among the numerous advisory experts called together by President Roosevelt to study the national housing situation, with especial regard to low-cost housing and slum clearance.

However, in one of his last press conferences before going on his fishing vacation, Mr. Roosevelt said that he couldn't find any two experts who would agree on any phrase of the problem, and official sources indicated that the matter would rest until the President's return.

Somewhat impatient at the delay, Senator Wagner introduced his measure, calling for the formation of the United States Housing Authority, authorized to make grants up to 45 per cent of the cost of projects to State and municipal housing authorities and authorized to loan the remainder for 60 years. It would appropriate $51,000,000 to start the work.

Leaders Join Green.

Other labor leaders who joined Green in praise of the bill included Harry C. Bates, president of the bricklayers' union, who said the appropriation of $876,000,000 was too small, but that it would be "a real beginning." Another was John Coefield, president of the plumbers' union, who said:

"This bill will introduce a new stabilizing element into the building industry as well as open up an entirely new market for the products of this industry."

A. R. Clas, director of the PWA housing division, which would be merged, under the Wagner bill, with the USHA, announced that 34 of the 50 PWA developments were now under construction, with two in Atlanta and one in Montgomery, Ala., to be completed this spring. His estimate showed that 20,000 jobs had been give under the housing program.

The new statistics threw considerable light on the almost bottomless depth into which the building industry, and thus employment, has sunk since the depression halted building.

All Time Peak in 1929.

One-sixth of the building done during the first two months was financed by Federal or State funds. After a study of the figures, J. W. Williams, president of the Building Trades Unions of the Federation, stated that building work now under way, despite its steady advance from depression days, would have to be tripled to give jobs to all those ordinarily in the building trades.

This would require nine million dollars of construction every day in the country, a half-million dollars daily more than the 1929 peak, when the building total for the year was $2,933,117,600. Four years before that the all-time peak building came in the United States when the total hit four billions, representing better than 11 millions a day.

With 641,235 persons listed as working in the building trades in February, 1,450,178 building trades workers were unemployed, according to A. F. of L. figures.

steam on which to proceed in the campaign."

Reporting on the national Republican plan to sell 1,000,000 "participation certificates" at $1 each to help finance the campaign, he said that in New York State, the first to report, 50,000 certificates are outstanding, and more than $5,000 was raised in one week.

Former Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, acknowledged his party in Pennsylvania probably would have a harder fight than it did in 1932, but added G. O. P. registrations were running ahead of Deocratic ones.

"We anticipate a stiff battle," he said, "because there are so many on the New Deal pay roll. New Dealers are doing all the loud talking, but the miners are wise enough to know they are being gypped."

Both Reed and Chairman Fletcher denied talk of a Republican slump and a wave of Roosevelt sentiment.

"This so-called slump just isn't so," Fletcher said. "If I had a publicity staff with the resources of the New Deal, Roosevelt wouldn't have a chance. He won't have, anyhow, as soon as we turn the searchlight of common sense on New Deal policies."

The meeting was a rally of Middle Atlantic Republican leaders to discuss the coming campaign and to co-ordinate their activities.

Hoover Attacks.

Fort Wayne, Ind., April 4 (AP).—Former President Herbert Hoover continued his attack on the Roosevelt Administration and New Deal policies tonight in an address in this northeastern Indiana industrial-farming center, in which he charged that the "most dangerous invasions of liberty by the New Deal have not been in the economic field" but in "the corruption of clear thinking."

The Supreme Court can check invasions of economic freedom, he said, but "the corruption of clear thinking is in the long view far more insidious and destructive to the safeguards of America."

"Civilization has advanced only whenever and wherever the critical faculty in the people has been free, alive, and unpolluted," he continued. "It slumps whenever this is misinformed, suppressed or intimated. That is the most certain lesson in history. They who have the thirst for power over the daily lives of the people in order to protect themselves from the political consequences of their actions are driven irresistibly and without peace to a greater and greater control of the Nation's thinking.

Sees Intimidation.

"Those who seek for power thus move easily from propaganda to raucous denunciation. From that it is but a step to intimidation. And we witness today the seizure of private communications of innocent persons and the press. That is gross violation of the spirit of the Bill of Rights. But Americans are not easily intimidated. A number of the unterrified have taken to sending me pungent telegrams, expressing the prayer that some New Deal agency will seize them and commit every word of them to memory. This may be the modern method of the constitutional right of petition—at least of bringing petitions under the eyes of the New Deal."

Instead of debating national problems, the former Chief Executive said, the New Deal "subordinates have loosed a smoke screen of personalities and have begun to fire the squirt guns of propaganda. These are not the answers that add to understanding. They are not the answers that add to understanding They are not the bold answer of responsible leaders expounding their point of view and offering their solutions. And slogans do not even pinch hit for facts."

New Deal a "Setback."

Reviewing events during the summer of 1932, before the election in which he was defeated, Hoover said it has been well established by disinterested economists that "America was shaking itself clear of the depression under its Republican Administration in June-July, 1932—and it was the uncertainties following the election that set back this progress.

"We alone of all great nations were set back," he said. "Most other nations continued upward."

The former President listed unemployment, relief, reduction of expenditures, balancing the budget, currency, the credit system, bureaucracy, monopolies, tariff and social security as the main problems which faced the Democratic administration when it came into power in 1933. He charged they had failed in their attempted solutions of all.

Unemployment can be solved, he said, by a return to "sound economic policies." Administration of relief he would return to local communities; he would return to a fixed valuation of the dollar instead of the "black magic of a managed currency"; he would restore the power of the bipartisan tariff commission which he said the New Deal had "sidetracked" in favor of "secret covenants, secretly arrived at."

But more important than all these problems," Hoover continued, "is the issue of American liberty."

"In the last campaign," he said, "we charged these men with the intention to introduce these foreign creeds of regimentation, Socialism and Fascism into America. They denied it. No proof is needed after three years of these attempts at so-called planned economy; this Government in business; this breaking down of constitutional safeguards by centralization of power; this reduction of Congress to a rubber stamp; this substitution of personal government of men for government of laws, and these attacks upon the Constitution.

"The American people have a right to know and to know whether the New Dealers will abandon these attacks upon the American system. They should stand up and repent or they should defend their intentions."

New Peak Predicted In Steel Industry

Steel activity, according to a United Press dispatch, will reach a new six-year peak this week at 74 per cent of capacity, a gain of two points from the previous week's level. Sixty-two of the 83 open hearths will be melting steel. The United Press points out that at capacity not more than 75 or 76 hearths operate at one time.

Peak operations a year ago were 54 per cent; two years ago, 56 per cent; three years ago, 12 per cent, and four years ago, 51 per cent.

Wallace Asked To Supply Data On AAA Checks

Senate Group Demands the Names of All Receiving $1,000 or More.

checks running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars for not producing certain commodities. Vandenberg, who was elated at yesterday's committee action broadening the scope of his resolution, recently charged in the Senate that one New York bank received $705,000 as its share of benefits to a Puerto Rican sugar concern.

At recent House hearings on the new $440,000,000 farm "soil conservation" appropriation, Davis admitted that many parties received large checks, but declared the task of sorting them out would take six months to complete. He was later backed up by Wallace, who said it would take 4,500 employes of the comptroller's office several weeks to do the job.

After an investigation, Representative John Taber (Republican), New York, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, disputed this. He said he was authoritatively informed ten men could do it in two weeks.

Wallace next told newspapermen that unprincipled persons might use the information for political purposes. Pointing out that when the "pink slip" income tax publicity law was up for repeal, it was suggested that children might be kidnaped unless the data was suppressed.

"Now somebody might come along and kidnap the farmer's daughter," he was quoted as saying by reporters who were present. Wallace, however, said on the following day that he had said "kidnap the farmer's dollar."

He argued further that assimilation of the data might interfere with distribution of checks to farmers whose contracts under AAA had been fulfilled. Vandenberg branded this a gesture to make it appear that Republicans were trying to shut off the flow of checks for political purposes.

The revised Vandenberg resolution also will call for information on the land, crops and livestock involved in the payments. Committee members hinted that Wallace now is ready and willing to meet the demands.

The Senate Agriculture Committee's action yesterday in attempting to force an over-rider of the President's veto of the $50,000,000 seed loan bill, came on motion of Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana.

Smith has repeatedly said he would press for approval of the bill over the veto, but yesterday's full support of his committee came as a surprise. Smith said it was a "vindicating" vote. What the Senate would do on another seed-loan vote was problematical, but Chairman James P. Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, predicted the House would not pass it.

Vetoing the original bill, President Roosevelt, nevertheless, set aside $30,000,000 of relief funds for seed loans to farmers. Wheeler and Smith contend, however, that needy farmers in drought and other areas have not been able to obtain the loans.

6,000 Get Pay As Ruling Frees Illinois Checks

Others on State Pay Roll to Wait as Battle Goes on Over 'Padding.'

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., April 4.—An opinion by Attorney General Otto Kerner today broke the jam which held up the State pay roll checks of some 6,000 Illinois employes for almost a week in a controversy over "padding for political purposes."

From his office in Chicago, Kerner ruled that State Treasurer John Steele and Auditor Edward J. Barrett, political foes of Gov. Henry Horner, who withheld checks for workers under his jurisdiction, had no right to delay payment to civil service and other "bona-fide" employes.

Arrangements were immediately made here to distribute checks to more than 6,000 civil service workers, but several thousand other warrants were still tied up with little immediate prospect for payment.

Kerner's opinion and a suit filed by a WPA worker made the outlook dubious for compensation for employes hired in the Governor's departments since February 1.

While advising prompt payment to the civil service list the attorney general, member of the same faction of the Democratic party as the auditor and treasurer, added:

"If the facts clearly show any employe is wrongfully on pay rolls, or has performed no service for the State, you will be justified in refusing to pay such person."

A petition filed by George Jacobs, of Springfield, foreman on a local courthouse WPA project, asked that Steele, Barrett, the Governor and Director of Finance K. L. Ames be restrained from paying any State employes hired since February 1. The suit alleged that 68 pesons of the Mines and Minerals Department were on the pay roll illegally and for political purposes, the same charges Steele leveled at the Governor when he first delayed an estimated 32,000 checks for March services on April 1.

Many of the original group of workers later received checks but previous to today's ruling from Kerner, officials estimated 31,000 still unpaid.

Steele and Barrett are candidates for re-nomination on the Democratic slate which has the indorsement of Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago and National Committeeman Patrick Nash. They charged the Governor added 3,000 names to pay rolls to aid his re-nomination campaign. Horner, who was refused support by the Kelly-Nash organization, has termed the treasurer's action a "purely political move."

One of his down-State supporters, Senator L. O. Williams, Clinton Democrat, issued a statement that he planned to push among members of the House of Representatives action for the impeachment of Steele.

Apples Escape Serious Frost Damage in Va.

Peach Blossoms Suffer, but Extent Is Unknown, Says Orchard Man.

By the Associated Press.

Staunton, Va., April 4.—Apples in Virginia's fruit belt extending north from Roanoke, escaped serious damage from Friday night's low temperatures, which ranged downward to 20 degrees, according to reports received today by William S. Campfield, secretary-treasurer of the Virginia Horticultural Society.

Peach blossoms suffered to some extent, with the greatest damage centered in the Crozet orchards, where a low temperature of 27 degrees was reported. Eighty per cent of peach trees in that section are in full bloom, but it is still too early to gauge the full extent of the damage. It was feared that buds in the lowlands suffered considerably.

"Winchester reported a low reading of 26 degrees, but orchardists do not anticipate any great damage to apples," Campfield declared. "Apple men expect to find slight damage to center blossoms, with possibly some damage to side blossoms, but express confidence the damage would not be reflected to any appreciable extent in the 1936 apple crop.

"It is impossible now to tell accurately just what the results of the freeze will be," he said, "as buds have to thaw out a little and several days may elapse before definite injury develops.

"In three years out of five there is some frost damage to apple blossoms in this stage. The crop, however, seldom suffers reduction from this damage. If as much as 5 per cent of the blossoms mature, it will result in a good crop."

Rockfish Valley and parts of Nelson County were covered with ice, with a low temperature of 27 at Amherst, but early examination of open peach blossoms showed no apparent damage.

Roanoke, with a low of 28, indicated some damage to peaches, but none to apples.

Ray Warrick, fruit packer, and R. H. Hurt, entomologist of the Piedmont Field Laboratory at Crozet, said strong winds until 2 a. m. doubtless helped prevent frost injury.

Lynchburg, with a low reading of 28, the lowest recorded there on April 4 in 65 years, expected some damage to peaches and small fruits.

Snow flurries at Winchester and in other sections, driven by brisk winds, gave way to sunshine today, and orchardists hoped that tonight's minimum would be higher than that of the past two days.

Laughing Girl Soon To Leave Hospital

Weston, W. Va., April 4 (AP).—Pretty Miss Teresa Hawkins, whose 300 consecutive hours of laughter were ended by an operation, took a few faltering steps about the hospital today and looked hopefully toward her expected trip home next week.

The 18-year-old brunet laughingly told her doctors:

"I was afraid I couldn't walk again. Then I tried. I guess I'm all right now."

During the paroxysms, which suddenly overtook her while she was attending a movie two months ago, the girl lost the ability to walk.

Dr. J. E. Offner, who operated to remove adhesions from a previous operation, said Teresa probably will go home Monday.

Virginians' Income Taxes at 4-Yr. Peak

The Treasury Department revealed yesterday that income tax collections from Virginians on March 31 had reached their highest peak in four years.

Collections during the first nine months of the current fiscal year totaled $9,762,168 (as compared with $6,243,398 in the same period of 1934—the worst income tax year of the depression in Virginia.

Figures for the same period of other recent years were: 1933, $7,669,338; 1935, $7,802,565.

For the past two years the Virginia collection climb has about kept pace with the national increase. It would appear from the comparative figures, however, that the depths of the depression did not reach the Old Dominion until after it had passed in the Nation. The national climb was steady from 1933, while in Virginia it did not begin until the year after.

Road Tax Increased.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Greencastle, Pa., April 4.—The supervisors of Antrim Townhip, at their meeting yesterday, placed the 1936 road tax at 3 mills, an increase of 1 mill over a year ago. The rise was caused by expenses incurred during the past winter for snow removal. It was announced that in the past few years the rate had steadily decreased from 7 mills to 2 mills, as the State has now assumed the greater portion of Antrim Township road maintenance.

Virginia G.O.P. Picks Vaughan, Adm. Stickney

Landon Gains Indorsement in Second District, Favored in 5th.

By the Associated Press.

Hillsville, Va., April 4.—State Senator Taylor G. Vaughan, of Galax, was nominated for Congress here today by the Fifth District Republican convention, which went on record as favoring the nomination of Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, as the party's nominee for President.

Senator Vaughan had no opposition. In a speech of acceptance, he announced he would wage an active campaign and that if elected he would not be a "yes" Congressman.

Joe W. Parsons, of Grayson county, was elected delegate to the National convention and B. A. Davis, sr., of Rocky Mount, alternate. Dr. S. A. Reynolds, of Pittsylvania county, was named presidential elector.

H. Prince Burnett, of Galax, was elected a member of the State executive committee, and former Ninth District Congressman Joseph C. Shaffer, whose home county of Wythe is now part of the Fifth District, was named member at large of the executive committee.

Second District G. O. P.

Norfolk, Va., April 4 (AP).—Rear Admiral H. O. Stickney, U. S. N., retired, today unanimously was nominated as the Republican candidate for Congress by the Second District Republican convention at Princess Anne Courthouse. The Republicans also adopted a resolution bitterly attacking the Roosevelt Administration, and praising former President Herbert Hoover, but showed in an informal vote that the majority present favored Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas as the party's candidate for President.

What several days ago had been expected to be a convention filled with bitter contests over the Congressional nomination was in reality one of the quietest political meetings in this section in years, and was termed by the speakers a "love feast."

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., April 4.—Daniel McFarland, 22, driver of a truck which struck and fatally injured Dorothy Mae Bunner, 10, near the Gore, Va., school house, while she was waiting for the bus to take her home, was ordered held for a Frederick County grand jury after a hearing today before trial Justice A. J. Tavenner.

A charge of "unlawfully and feloniously" operating a truck is lodged against him. State police testified McFarland told them the child ran into the path of the truck in pursuit of a ball.

Aid Bill Signed By Nice; Taxes Go Into Effect

Maryland Emergency Act to Raise $2,925,000; Will End March 31, 1937.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., April 4.—Taxes on whisky, beer, cosmetics, corporations and amusements became operative today when Gov. Harry W. Nice affixed his signature to the revenue bill passed by the Legislature and designed to raise $2,925,000 for relief during the next 12 months.

The major levies are:

A 5-cent floor tax on whisky, 75 cents a barrel on beer; 1 per cent tax on amusements, with a 5 to 15-cent tax on passes; 10 per cent tax on cosmetics, and tripling of the franchise taxes on domestic corporations. Foreign corporations will pay a quadruple rate on their capital invested in Maryland.

The taxes, which run to March 31, 1937, are effective as of April 1.

Senate President Lansdale G. Sasscer (Democrat), Prince Georges, and Speaker Emanuel Gorfine (Democrat), Fourth Baltimore, signed the measure after the Governor had done so. The bill previously had been approved as to its legality by Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor.

Second Relief Measure.

It was the second relief measure passed by the special legislative session to become a law. A law continuing the 1 per cent automobile titling tax, to raise $400,000 during the year, became effective March 31, when it was approved by the Governor.

With this measure, the total revenue provided by the relief bills is $3,350,000 for the 12 months. In addition, $900,000, accumulated from the 1 per cent gross receipts tax which expired March 31, is in or due the State treasury for old-age pensions.

From these three sources, the State will have $4,250,000 from its own taxes for relief and old-age pensions.

On this basis, $2,200,000 in Federal matching grants and $700,000 to be contributed by local political subdivisions, brings the total relief funds to $7,150,000.

Two of the seven bills signed today bring the State laws governing aid to dependent children and old-age pensions in accord with the Federal social security act. These laws make it possible for the State to receive aid from the Federal funds.

Among the bills signed by the Governor and the heads of the legislative houses were two flood measures. They give the mayor and City Council of Cumberland and the Board of Allegany County commissioners each authority to issue $500,000 in bonds for the repair and rebuilding of public property injured by flood.

Will Sign Bonds Bill.

The Governor set Wednesday noon for the signing of the $1,500,000 State bond issue authorization bill which would raise money for the repair and rebuilding of State roads and bridges damaged by the flood. At the same time, he said, he planned to sign measures bearing a referendum clause so that they can go before the electorate at the May 4 primary election.

The Governor also signed a bill authorizing the Allegany County commissioners to issue $60,000 in bonds annually through 1940 to be used in liquidating the county's indebtedness to the State roads commission, caused by over expenditure of the amount allocated to the county from the State gasoline tax lateral road funds.

Another measure approved provides for reciprocity with other States in collecting inheritance and similar taxes on estates of nonresident decedents.

A total of 320 bills were introduced in the Legislature, 161 in the Senate and 159 in the House. The Legislature passed and sent to the Governor 159 measures made up of 86 Senate bills and 73 House bills. This tabulation does not include joint resolutions, several of which were passed.

Water Source Restored, Hagerstown Washes Cars

Hagerstown, Md., April 4.—Today was car-washing day in all of the city's garages and hundreds of persons rushed to have the mud from the recent flood removed from their autos.

For two weeks, since the flood caused suspension of activity at the Potomac River pumping station operated by the city, garages have been restricted from using water for washing cars. Last night the pumping station resumed operations.

Hagerstown, during the interim, has been served by its two mountain reservoirs, capable of supplying slightly more than 50 per cent of the normal consumption of water here.

Montgomery School Program Is Halted by Wage Dispute

PWA Officials Notify County Bids Cannot Be Accepted Pending Settlement of Controversy With Washington Labor Unions.

Recurrent labor battles that have harassed the Montgomery County Board of Education and the PWA during the last two years flared anew yesterday and brought a temporary halt to the county's $850,000 school building program. Superintendent of Schools Edwin W. Broome was notified by PWA officials not to accept bids on any further school projects pending settlement of a wage controversy between the PWA and Washington labor unions.

Broome said the school board is prepared to receive bids on a new junior high school in Montgomery Hills and on an addition to the Western Suburban, Sandy Spring and Montgomery Blair senior high schools, but will withhold acceptance until the labor dispute is settled.

The controversy arose, according to Broome, when the advertisements for bids called for payment of the prevailing county wage scale. This drew a protest from Washington labor unions, who have demanded that the Washington scale be paid, basing their contention on the fact that living costs in the suburban area of the county in which most of the school projects are located, are as high as in Washington. The county wage scale is $1.10 per hour, whereas the scale in Washington ranges from $1.25 up.

Paying the Washington scale, Broome declared, will materially increase cost of construction of the school buildings and may require revision of plans. Also, he contended, it will have the effect of placing all labor in the county in competition with labor in Washington, with the added result of tending to increase the scale on private buildings and increase the cost of new home construction in the county, which is now in the midst of a healthy building boom.

Walter W. Dawson, counsel to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, yesterday was directed by the commission to study the legal aspects of the situation revolving around attempts to prevent rebuilding homes on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal property inundated by the floods two weks ago.

Applications for building permits have been filed by about 15 persons whose homes were destroyed or washed away by the floods, but approval has been withheld pending further study. Representatives of the canal company joined with the applicants in opposing the commission's plan to prevent building along the canal area.

Several technical points, including requirements that homes must face a highway and that no buildings can be erected on land not divided and recorded so that the building will be located on a "separate and distinct lot or recorded parcel of ground" have been raised by the commission's attorney.

Donald A. DeLashmutt, attorney for the canal company, contended at a meeting with the commission yesterday that the canal and its towpaths constitute a public highway.

In an effort to avoid a legal battle in the courts, decision has been reserved pending Dawson's report.

The United Young Men's Democratic Clubs of Montgomery County will hold their annual election tomorrow night in the old courthouse building in Rockville. The meeting also will make plans for the local clubs to participate in the Jefferson Day program in Baltimore on April 13 under the auspices of the Young Democratic Clubs of Maryland, with which the local group is affiliated.

A slate of candidates for delegates to the Democratic State convention next month was filed yesterday with the board of election supervisors by the Democratic organization. Candidates are Mrs. D. Jane Price, Barnesville; former Judge Donald A. DeLashmutt, Rockville; Ralph H. Chase, of Chevy Chase; J. Bond Smith, Takoma Park; Lacy Shaw, Colesville, and J. Harry Welch, Chevy Chase. This is the only Democratic slate filed to date.

An active campaign to drum up sentiment in favor of liberalizing county gambling laws to permit use of pin ball and bingo games by county volunteer firemen, churches and charitable organizations will be started next week by the Montgomery County Volunteer Firemen's Association.

The special session of the Legislature just adjourned provided for a referendum on the subject in conjunction with the Presidential and Congressional primary election May 4. The measure has not yet been signed by Gov. Nice, but fire department officials predicted his approval in view of the referendum clause.

County attorneys supporting the move to secure an additional judge for the Montgomery-Frederick Circuit Court apparently will have strong backing from lawyers in Frederick and Prince Georges counties it was indicated yesterday in Rockville.

Although Prince Georges County is in a different judicial circuit, it was pointed out that many attorneys in that county also practice in Rockville and have felt the need of another judge for several years.

A referendum on the proposal to amend the constitution to provide an additional judge for this circuit will be held in conjunction with the State and National election next fall.

R. C. Winslow, of the State forestry department, was the speaker at a meeting of the Community Garden Club, of Rockville, held yesterday at the Fire Department Building in Rockville, Md. Winslow gave an illustrated lecture on roadside planting in the interest of the project being promoted by the garden club for the planting of trese along the Rockville-Washington pike.

S. W. Baumiller, in charge of the roadside beautification department of the State Roads Commission, also attended the meeting and took part in the discussion.

Beginning next week, the club will begin planting tulip, poplar and Oriental plane trees from Rockville to Bethesda. The trees will be planted about 100 feet apart and the first planting will be about 100 trees and will extend for about 2½ miles toward Bethesda.

Prince Georges Waits Approval Of 13 Measures

Only One Bill Offered by County Delegation Fails to Pass Assembly.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 4.—Thirteen Prince Georges County bills, a majority of which were enacted during the closing hours of the special session of the General Assembly, await only the signature of Gov. Harry W. Nice before being placed on the statute books.

Only one measure offered by the county delegation failed of passage, this being the bill sponsored by the board of regents of the University of Maryland, which would have vested the institution with broad powers to condemn any land in the State for expansion it might wish.

The bill was permitted to die in the House Judiciary Committee.

Three measures providing for referenda on the question of incorporating communities in the county were among those rushed through the Senate and House before adjournment early yesterday. The areas in which the residents will have the opportunity of voting to incorporate are District Heights Berwyn and University Park. Referenda are scheduled in each community during May of this year.

One of the most important bills to be presented to the Governor for approval is that empowering the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission to assume the responsibility for maintenance of a system of flood levees on the Eastern Branch of the Anacostia River in the Bladensburg section in cooperation with the Federal Government.

Grant Delayed.

A grant of $200,000 for the work by the Public Works Administration has been delayed because of the lack of a local agency to acquire land and rights of way and to maintain the levees following their completion. It is expected, however, that passage of the bill will insure obtaining of the allotment at an early date.

Two acts advocated by the mayor and council of Riverdale were passed. One would give authority for the paving of four blocks on Maryland avenue from Washington avenue to Lincoln avenue and from Madison avenue to Lafayette avenue without the necessity of a referendum of property owners.

The other Riverdale measure would transfer several blocks of property on the west side of Calvert street from Hyattsville into Riverdale. The bill will entail a loss to the town of about $68,000 in assessable property.

Another bill would empower the University of Maryland to sell 270 acres located on the research center of the United States Department of Agriculture at Beltsville to the Federal Government.

Regulation of hog pens by the county commissioners in the suburban area of Capitol Heights, West Washington Heights, Forestville and Suitland is provided in a bill passed by both houses.

The treasurer of the Prince Georges County Volunteer Firemen's Association would be given the opportunity of posting private surety for $16,500, the amount allotted the association by the county commissioners, in another bill. Under the present law, he is required to be bonded for that amount.

Change in Charter.

Other legislation would make a change in the town charter of Hyattsville, so that the authorities could carry out street maintenance and repair work with regular town labor and equipment without the necessity of advertising for bids on such projects.

HOW A BABY GROWS

By Arnold Gesell, M. D.

WHEN does a normal baby begin to reach for objects? When do tiny pawlike hands change into expert little grippers? How does creeping turn into toddling? See the answers to these and scores of other questions about babies in "How a Baby Grows."

It took hundreds of examinations of growing babies, a special studio and 25 years of patient work to gather the information and pictures on which this unusual photographic story is based.

It is the most authoritative, enlightening and fascinating record of the mental and physical development of the infant that has ever been produced.

It tells in pictures the complete story of babyhood as it has never been told before. From sprawling helplessness at birth to creeping, crawling, standing, walking, you see the baby grow before your very eyes.

"HOW A BABY GROWS" is the result of a quarter of a century of research on the part of Dr. Gesell, director of the Yale Clinic of Child Development and internationally famed specialist.

Ten years ago Dr. Gesell began a unique method of studying babies. He used the movie camera as a scientific tool for charting mental and physical growth.

From the wonderful film library that he built and other basic materials he has selected and interpreted a progressive series of pictures which tells the most interesting story in the world, "HOW A BABY GROWS." It will be presented to you daily and Sunday in The Washington Post beginning Sunday, April 12.

★ Dr. Gesell has written a number of books on child development. His latest work in collaboration with other members of the staff of the Yale Clinic, "An Atlas of Infant Behavior," was published in 1934 and sells for $25.

Among his other books are: "The Mental Growth of the Preschool Child" (1925); "Infancy and Human Growth" (1928); "The Guidance of Mental Growth in Infant and Child" (1930) and "Infant Behavior" (with H. Thompson, 1934).

Legion to Ask That U. S. Buy Gadsby Tavern

Burden of Maintenance on Alexandria Post Is Called Too Heavy.

The stockholders of Gadsby's Tavern and City Hotel, Inc., who are members of Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, voted unanimously to open negotiations with the Department of the Interior, U. S. Park Service, to have the Government take over and complete the work of restoration of Gadsby's Tavern and its maintenance as a historic shrine.

The property, consisting of the original Gadsby's Tavern and the Old City Hotel, as well as a modern annex which is occupied by the post as a meeting room and club, was purchased about ten years ago by the post, with the intention of restoring the buildings and maintaining them as a memorial to the World War dead. Since acquisition of the property the post, assisted by the Colonial Dames and the Daughters of the American Revolution, has expended approximately $30,000 in restoration work which, however, is far from completed, and will require the expenditure of about $32,000 additional. There is an outstanding obligation of $14,000, upon which the post has been paying interest, and it has been found that this burden is more than can be borne without assistance.

The Secretary of the Interior will be asked for an appropriation in the new deficiency bill, under the recently enacted Byrd law, of $15,000, in case the Government acquires title only to the two main buildings, or $20,000, if the modern annex also is included in the transaction, the post to be allowed to retain the heating plant, furniture and fixtures.

Everett A. Hellmuth, past commander of Alexander Post, No. 24, American Legion, will act as toastmaster at the annual Army Day banquet in the George Mason Hotel tomorrow night.

Special guests of the post will be the commanding officers of nearby Army posts, Col. C. A. Soane, chief signal officer of the Army, representing the commanding general of the Third Corps Area; Maj. Horace B. Smith, representing the Sixteenth Brigade Headquarters; Thomas Delehanty, vice commander of the American Legion, and John J. Wicker, jr., post department commander, and many Army and Marine Corps officers.

It was announced at the meeting that the sale of tickets for the banquet would be closed last night, the capacity of the dining room in the hotel having been reached.

Commander Harry N. Jones, of Alexandria Post, presented membership cards certifying to 15, 10 and 5 years continuous membership in the Legion, to a number of members. It was announced that the present membership exceeds that of 1935.

Harry F. Kennedy is general chairman for the second annual police ball, to be given on April 22, at the George Mason Hotel. The affair is for the benefit of the police department charity fund.

Fair, Foul Weather Flags in Use Here

Schools in the District are provided with two flags, one, bright and new, that is hoisted on fine, sunny days, and a second, fairly-worn, that is pulled out on bad-weather days.

This "Sunday best" distinction between the flags flown at the masts of the city's schools was explained at the last meeting of the Board of Education by Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou in reply to a letter from Admiral Spencer S. Wood, retired, calling attention to the condition of the flag at one of the city's schools.

The common practice, Dr. Ballou explained, is for the custodian to look out of his window in the morning, decide what sort of weather is likely and choose the appropriate flag.

If the custodian guesses wrong as a weather prophet, Dr. Ballou explained, the wrong flag might fly to the dismay of patriotic passersby.

Harpers Ferry Historical Site Plan Discussed

350 Hear Discussion of Proposed Park Area Overlooking Town.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harpers Ferry, W. Va., April 4.—The movement to develop a national historical site here, through the cooperation of national and State agencies, was the subject last night at a dinner-meeting here attended by 350 persons.

Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia; Representative David L. Lewis, of Maryland, and Aron B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, were the main speakers. Dr. H. T. McDonald presided.

Cammerer revealed the plans of the National Park Service, approved by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, to develop the heights overlooking this town—Maryland, Loudoun and Bolivar Heights—which have Civil War fortifications. It is also proposed to include the arsenal site, associated with John Brown.

Cammerer impressed upon the meeting the fact that the necessary sites must be donated to the United States, in which case it is proposed to create a national historic site, which can be linked with the proposed parkway extensions from the Skyline drive and also the proposed Lincoln-Gettysburg memorial boulevard.

The Hagerstown Chamber of Commerce, which is backing the proposed new park area here, was represented at the meeting by a committee headed by John B. Ferguson, president.

Cammerer pointed out the possibilities of attracting tourist travel to see the development.

Wife Killer, Friend Receive Life Terms

Bedford, Ia., April 4 (AP).—Floyd Horton's "home-folk" jury of 11 men and one woman decreed today the "cornfield Casanova" must serve life in prison for the poison-murder of his attractive wife, Elta, 37.

District Judge Homer A. Fuller then imposed a like penalty on the philandering farmer's friend, the 195-pound widow, Anna Johnston. She previously had pleaded guilty to first-degree murder and had supplied the prosecution with the foundation of its case against her neighbor.

The State, producing testimony that Horton not only was unfaithful to his wife, but to his friend as well, charged Horton substituted poison, obtained from Mrs. Johnston, for medicine in a capsule his friend prepared for his wife to treat a cold. Mrs. Horton died on the night of February 14.

The defense sought to establish that Mrs. Johnston sent the poisoned pellet to Mrs. Horton so "she could have Horton all to herself."

Winds Chill Society Folk At Hunt Club

Fur Coats and Tweeds in Evidence at Bradley Farms Events.

Hot Coffee Is the Favorite Refreshment Order at Lunch Table.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Warm sunshine and winter coats competed with cold winds before which society shivered as it watched the Hunter Trials of the Riding and Hunt Club at Bradley Farms yesterday. Several hundred gathered for the event and furs and heavy tweeds predominated in the sports costumes of the spectators rather than the gay spring outfits which a warmer day would have brought out.

The women's committee arrived at the farmhouse at 11:30 and prepared sandwiches, cakes, tarts and hot coffee—the last named the most welcome part of the menu because it was hot.

The food was served by a group including Mrs. Fenton M. Fadeley and her aunt, Mrs. E. F. Caverly, who is here from New York; Mrs. Joseph Horgan, Mrs. Samuel Scrivener, jr.; Mrs. Edmund Parry, jr.; Miss Marian Reybold and Mrs. Marian L. Reybold, sister and mother of Capt. J. B. Reybold, one of the participants from Fort Myer; Mrs. W. Spencer Brenizer, Mrs. Percy Niepold and Mrs. Earle Elliott, of Chevy Chase.

Mrs. Claude W. Owen was general chairman of the group, with Mrs. Fred Sanderson and Mrs. Harry Semmes as vice chairmen. The lunch counter was covered with a paper cloth on which tulips bloomed in bright array, and bouquets of forsythia were like spots of sunshine on the mantel and in the windows, but beneath the counter a small electric heater glowed to warm the feet of the committee members.

Many Eat Indoors.

Across the hall little tables, with yellow paper covers, were arranged for those who chose to eat inside, and many took advantage of them because of their proximity to the fireplace, in which large logs were burning.

In the yard and on the back porch Mrs. James N. Greear, jr., whose husband was one of the riders, worked with her committee serving coffee and frankfurters—1,000 had been provided and the surplus was being sold in dozen lots at the end of the afternoon. There was also ice cream under charge of Mrs. R. E. Moran, but it was not as popular as the coffee; candy under charge of Mrs. A. P. Reeves, with several boys as salesmen; the soft drinks under charge of Miss Frances Cox and the cigarettes sold by Mrs. J. J. Cotter.

Miss Margaret Cotter, who was entered in class D, for the Masters Plate, presented by Dr. Fred R. Sanderson, M. F. H. of the Riding and Hunt Club, served on her mother's committee, doing a good business in the sale of cigarettes up to the time her class was called. Benny, her Dalmatian puppy, was demanding part of her attention, and she found it difficult to be a cigarette girl and the "master of a hound" at the same time.

Cows Graze, Gaze.

In back of the farmhouse, two complacent cows and a horse grazed at will and evinced only mild curiosity as visitors passed by. Among those leaning on a rail fence not far away were Countess Vandenburgh, daughter of Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, the Ambassador of Belgium, and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, and her brother, Mr. Charles van der Straten-Ponthoz, who is a student at Princeton and is home for the Easter holidays. Later in the afternoon Countess Vandenburgh presented the Chevy Chase plate to Capt. Marion "Kit" Carson, U. S. A., whose gray mare Turn On was winner in Class D.

Some of those present walked to the stables to look at the horses, while others perched on the rail fence and still others—feeling the chill of winter in the wind—wrapped themselves Indian fashion in steamer rugs and blankets or sought the shelter of their cars.

There was Miss Betty Couzens, daughter of Senator and Mrs. James Couzens, in her dark coat and derby and red-brown riding breeches; her sister Mrs. Margo Couzens Chewning, in a light suit with fox collar; Mrs. Marshall Orme Exnicios, dressed in a plaid tweed coat, with a red dress beneath, and a felt hat; Mrs. C. B. Lyman, wife of Colonel Lyman, who won the Riding and Hunt Club Plate, riding Mrs. Forrest Sherman's My Lass, and also placed first in Class C, with Capt. William Wyman, winning the Montgomery County Plate.

Mrs. Lyman wore a black riding habit with an orange vest. There was also Miss Nancy Hanna, who hunts with the Fairfax Club, who was in riding clothes and brought her own horse, Gone Away, which was ridden by Dr. Greear in one of the events.

Dog Is "Pampered."

Commander Don Umberto Cugia, Marquis of Sant'Orsola, and his wife, Donna Bianca Cugia., one of those who wore a fur coat, were also there. Mrs. V. L. LaGarde had with her on a leash her little Schnauzer "Schnitzer," who received much attention from both friends and strangers.

Mr. Fenton Fadeley, who rode in several of the events, was responsible for the smooth course over which the riders traveled. He went out early in the morning and "hand picked" the stones from around every jump. There was only one rider thrown during the afternoon, Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, well-known horsewoman, who always rides sidesaddle. Mrs. Winmill was entered on two horses in Class D and, although she took a spill from the first, "My Toy," she won the Masters Plate on the second, Cin Quidado, a handsome gray.

Miss Margaret Hill, riding her mother's big hunter, Questionnaire, in two events, had difficulty with him in both and was disqualified when he refused the jumps. There was disappointment in the crowd when her horse failed to perform, for she is known as a horsewoman of rare skill, although she is only 13 years old.

Mrs. L. T. Hundt, wife of Commander Hundt, who was thrown in the practice for the Hunter Trials a week ago and suffered a fracture of the collar bone, had charge of presenting the ribbons to the winners yesterday. Capt. Carson placed first in both Class B and Class D, and the Fort Myer team of three hunters took the Potomac Plate in Class E. Mrs. William Hill, mother of Miss Margaret Hill, made the presentation of the Riding and Hunt Club Plate to Mrs. Lyman—made it several times, in fact, for the benefit of the photographers who were there.

The trials ended at 5 o'clock and an enthusiastic but chilled crowd prepared to celebrate in the evening at an informal supper dance at Freres Farm.

An Interlude at the Hunt Trials

Underwood & Underwood.

Mr. Malcolm McConihe chatting with Miss Margaret Cotter and Miss Marjorie Baker between events at the Hunter Trials of the Riding and Hunt Club at Bradley Farms yesterday. Miss Cotter served as a cigarette girl on her mother's committee during the early part of the day and rode later.

Troyanovskys Entertain 300 Guests At Musical Reception in Embassy

Two Metropolitan Opera Stars Are Heard by Large Company.

The Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Mme. Troyanovsky were hosts to more than 300 guests at a musical reception at the embassy last evening. The soloists were Miss Myrtle Leonard, contralto, and Mr. Emanuel List, basso, both of the Metropolitan Opera House of New York. Miss Mildred Brown and Mr. Fritz Kitzinger were at the piano. Miss Leonard started with songs by Handel, Scarlatti and Tchaikowski, continued with "Over the Steppe," by Gretchaninoff and "The Fairy Pipers," by Herbert Brewer, and concluded with the popular "Mon Coeur" from the Saint-Saens opera, "Samson and Delila." Mr. List's program included Flagier, Schubert, Schumann, Verdi, Rossini, Kern's "Old Man River" and as an encore the famous "Drinking Song."

Mr. List sang last night in "Tristan und Isolde" in Baltimore and tonight will be heard over the radio at 9:45 in a New York broadcast.

Miss Leonard was presented with a bouquet of roses at the close of her second group and closed her part of the program with "Sylvia," by Oley Speaks.

At the beginning of the concert, the top of the piano was up and the Ambasador, noting it, put it down himself. The guests listened to the singers with evident enjoyment and none appeared to enjoy the concert more than the Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrios Sicilianos, who has just returned from a few days' visit to New York. Once or twice, during the applause following a number he could be seen, although not heard, humming the concluding strain of the song quietly to himself as though he were sorry to have it end.

After the program, a buffet supper was served in the banquet hall, where a long table was set with a great platter of sturgeon and salad forming the centerpiece. The head of the fish was at one end of the dish and its fan-shaped tail at the other. The Ambassador brought the sturgeon home with him from Russia when he returned recently, preserved in dry ice and had kept it to serve on this occasion. It was caught in the River Volga.

"The Volga Boatman" by the way, which was one of Mr. List's numbers on the printed program, was omitted. Although his audience hoped he might be saving it as a closing song, he did not sing it—perhaps because of its similarity in character to "Deep River," another of his selections.

Brigade Commander Vladimir Alexandrovich Burzin, Military Attache of the Embassy, was present last night, with Mme. Burzin. They have just returned from a motor trip of 12 days through the Middle West to Kansas and Oklahoma.

They visited Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley in Kansas and Fort Sill, in Oklahoma. The country, says Commander Burzin, is in character like Russia with its vast farming area and its resources. Mme. Burzin remarked that the people, too, were more like those in Russia. "There you are not such a different person," she told Commander Burzin. "Many other men there are tall and large, as you are."

The guests included the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Ertegun, the Ambassador of Belgium and the Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, the Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui; the Ambassador of China and Mrs. Sze, the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel O. The Camera Peeps About the Course as Stars Perform in Masters' Tourney

"Lighthorse" Harry Cooper is shown after he piled up a commanding lead in the Augusta Invitation Golf Tournament yesterday.

This panorama shows that Bobby Jones, once the greatest of all golf stars, still draws a gallery. As in the days of yore, Jones has most of the spectators tagging him about the Augusta course, even though he falters miserably.

Bright Light Wins In Bowie Handicap

15,000 Watch as Derby Candidate Runs From Last; Pays $16.30.

Shandon Farms' Colt Is Victor by a Length; New Deal Scores.

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

BOWIE RACE TRACK, April 4.—"Look out, Kentucky Derby! Here I come." That's what the colt Bright Light seemed to be saying with his four hooves in the Bowie stretch this afternoon. Virtually left at the post, the son of Sun Flag ran a remarkable race to win the James Rowe Memorial Handicap, the feature event of a program that drew 15,000 to the Prince Georges County turf plant.

"Gangway, men, I'm coming through," Jockey Harry Richards probably yelled to the other riders. Last at the head of the stretch, Bright Light turned on the speed. As if they were tied to the eighth pole, the Shandon Farms colt bounded past his rivals. Up, up, up he came with Richards urging. Horse and rider giving all—a beautiful move to see and sweet music to those who were to participate in the $16.30 mutuel that resulted.

A length behind Bright Light came the proud cerise and white diamonds of the Vanderbilt stable borne by Speed to Spare. Another three lengths away was the silver, red bars and gold cap which designate the Bomar stable horses and carried today by Night Play. Stretched out through the path to the imaginary wire were six others giving their best, which was not good enough.

The Crowd Arrives.

The bright skies and kindly sun proved a blessing to the proprietors of the track. Long lines of cars squirmed over the roads, loaded with customers. The railroad specials and the buses brought in their share. Long lines developed before the ticket windows. The concessions did a brisk business, thanks to the slight chill in the air.

Although many arrived too late to wager on the daily double, most of them probably saved money, for only a few were in on the $148.20 mutuel, the highest of the meeting to date. The winning combination was that of Time Piece in the first race and Wiggle In in the third race.

When Starter Milton rang the bell for the feature race, Bright Light appeared as useful as a burned-out bulb. While the others in the field scurried away, Bright Light stood like a statue of a horse for a moment and when he set sail there was plenty of daylight between him and the next-to-the-last horse.

Battle for the Lead.

In the meanwhile, Stubbs and Speed to Spare drew out to battle for the lead, followed by Galloglass and Night Play. The Bright Light backers for the most part were debating whether to tear up their tickets or save them for souvenirs.

Entering the stretch, Stubbs began to wilt and Speed to Spare had the empty track in front of him. Night Play was making a mild bid but it appeared that the Vanderbilt pacesetter had only to go through the formality of galloping to the wire.

"Out of the clouds," in the turf parlance, came Bright Light. Steered to the middle of the track, Bright Light ran as if Jockey Richards had aimed him at the finish line. The Sun Flag colt appeared to be taking three hops to his rivals' one. In the distance between one of the sixteenth poles, Bright Light passed seven horses. Then it was on to the flying Speed to Spare and then on out in the clear. It was Bright Light the winner by a length.

Walter O'Hara, New England sportsman, watched his New Deal score a smashing victory in the Sir

Norfolk Pair Set 2 World Marks; Mrs. Quigley Wins Singles.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

MORGAN ALLEYS, Hartford, Conn., April 4.—Out of a maze of huge scores tonight in the ninth annual National Duckpin Bowling Congress came two world records in which Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, played the feature role with Mary Stapleton, her doubles partner aiding the country's No. 1 girl star in establishing one of the marks.

The Southern pair electrified a packed morning gallery by creating a record doubles score of 784 with Ida shooting 410 and Mary 374. It started Miss Simmons off on her second record feat as she continued to pile up the maples for a nine-game record of 1,149, which gave her the lead in the all-events over Catherine Quigley, of Washington,

Eleanor Holm Sets World Record

Betters Own Mark for 100-Yards; Mary Petty Wins 2d Title.

By the United Press.

CHICAGO, April 4.—Eleanor Holm Jarrett, world's backstroke champion, shattered her own world's record for 100-yards tonight as two defending champions retained their crowns in the final night of the national A. A. U. indoor swimming and diving championships.

Hitting a furious pace for the entire distance, Mrs. Jarrett pushed a length into the lead as she finished in 1 minute, 8.9 secnods. Her own recognized mark was 1 minute, 9.6.

It was the second time in two days Mrs. Jarrett bettered her world mark. Swimming lead-off position on the New York Women's Swimming Association 300-yard medley relay team last night, she negotiated the distance in 1:7.4.

Medica Wins Third Title.

Jack Medica, slope-shouldered husky from the University of Washington, slipped away from John Macionis, Yale, and Ralph Flanagan, Miami, in the final 25 yards of the men's 500-yard free style event and captured his third national championship of the week.

The world's record holder and defending champion stayed with his field for 18 lengths of the pool, then called on all his magnificent speed for the finish. His time was 5 minutes, 24 seconds. Macionis was second and Flanagan third.

One defending champion, Lenore Kight Wingard, of Cincinnati, was dethroned in the early events. She dropped her 500-yard free-style title to Mary Lou Petty, petite miss from the Washington Athletic Club, who has created a sensation this week among the Nation's girl swimmers.

Wins Second Title of Week.

The triumph was the Western star's second in two nights over Mrs. Wingard and marked the end of the latter's reign over American feminine free stylers at longer distances. Like last night's 220-yard final in which Miss Petty won a close decision, the 500-yard championship was a bitter struggle all the way, although the time, 6 minutes 21 seconds, was well off Mrs. Wingard's world mark of 6:15.2.

After swimming about even with Miss Petty and June Burr for 300 yards, Mrs. Wingard pulled away to a barely noticeable lead. Miss Petty took command in the last 50 yards, however, and finished about an arm's length in front. Miss Burr was third.

Griffith Outraged That Experts Pick Nats for Seventh

By a Staff Correspondent.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 4. With mounting rage and indignation, Clark Griffith today perused an Associated Press dispatch which revealed that his Washington ball club had been picked to finish seventh in the 1936 race by a consensus of 97 baseball writers.

"Bosh," exclaimed the silver-thatched Washington club owner. "I have never seen such nonsense. Why, we'll make this thing look silly. What can those people be thinking about?"

It was apparently very plain what the gentlemen who had participated in the poll had been thinking about. They had been thinking about the dismal Washington pitching staff of 1935, and the Nats' bare escape from the cellar into sixth place last season. And they were thinking also, no doubt, that Griffith has not added any tried-and-trusted big leaguers to that staff.

But the Nats' owner was genuinely outraged. "What these people don't know about our ball team this year is plenty," he continued. "We're not the same ball club we were last season, but they don't realize that. Anyway, you can't win pennants on paper.

"We're going to be the surprise team of this league. I tell you. Some people just can't believe that Buddy Lewis already is a great third baseman and that Cecil Travis is a swell shortstop. They think we're ust experimenting. But we're done with that kind of business. Our ball team is all set, and it's a good ball team.

"I'm not worried about our pitching, we've got enough hitting power on this club to get by, but picking us to finish seventh is a joke. Why, look at some of those teams they've got ahead of us.

"There isn't a super-team in the league. We don't have much to beat. That Cleveland pitching staff has been the most over-rated thing in the league for four or five years now, and I wouldn't swap my ball club even up for the Yankees. And if we can't beat out the White Sox or the Browns, I don't know my own name. Why those two clubs don't figure at all with us. Anybody who thinks we'll finish seventh is plumb crazy."

Carideo's Teacher Is To Lecture at Purdue

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lafayette, Ind.—A feature of the fifth annual Purdue Football Clinic, which will be conducted here Friday and Saturday, will be a lecture and demonstration on kicking by LeRoy N. Mills, prominent attorney of Westchester County, N. Y., who has made a life-long hobby of the study of kicking a football. Mills' prize pupil was Frank Carideo, Notre Dame's all-American quarterback of a few years ago.

Griffith Cuts Lanahan, 4 Others

Wynne, Holbrook, Pettit, Perryman Also Are Shifted; Game Off.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 4. Dick Lanahan and the Washington ball club came to a parting of the ways here tonight. The local boy who was supposed to have made good with the Nats figured in a shift of talent within the Washington baseball organization that involved seven players.

Lanahan, with Catcher Sammy Holbrook, was transferred to the Nats' Chattanooga club tonight by Clark Griffith, Washington owner, who also ordered the transfer of Catchers Hucky Wynne and Floyd Perryman, and Pitcher Leon Pettit from Chattanooga to Albany.

Catcher Jack Redmond and Pitcher Whitey Hayes will go to Albany from Chattanooga.

Thus Wynne, the prize product of The Washington Post Sandlot Association last year, takes a step up the baseball ladder in his first fling in professional baseball. Following his training trip with the Nats, which was financed by The Post, Wynne was given a contract with Chattanooga in the Class A Southern League. With Albany, he will be in the Class AA, International League.

The game between Washington and Chattanooga here today was canceled because of cold weather.

Holbrook's release to Chattanooga by the Nats is the direct result of Washington's acquisition of Catcher Walter Millies from the Brooklyn Dodgers. With Millies rated superior to Holbrook both defensively and at bat, and Bill Starr also regarded as a better prospect than Holbrook, the latter's release has long been forecast.

For the past two weeks, Lanahan's release also appeared imminent. The young Washington lad was literally a wild Irishman throughout the Nats' training trip, possessing neither control of his pitches nor adhering strictly to the club's training rules.

To Manager Bucky Harris, Lanahan was the chief disappointment of the spring campaign. The former Eastern High School pitcher came South with the Nats, regarded as an excellent prospect following his sensational work with Chattanooga last season and his impressive performance in two starts with the Nats at the fag end of the season.

But added weight which was supposed to help his speed proved a distinct handicap to Lanahan, who

Cincinnati Beats Tigers, 5-4; Puccinelli Hits 3 Homers for A's

CINCINNATI, April 4.—Outfielder Floyd (Babe) Herman signed his contract with the Cincinnati Reds late today after a three-hour conference with General Manager Larry MacPhail.

MacPhail, declining to disclose details of the agreement, ordered Herman to leave tonight for Macon, Ga., to work out for three days with the Reds' farm club there. The 6-foot, 4-inch outfielder will report to Manager Charles Dressen at Winston-Salem Wednesday.

The signing of the hard-hitting fly chaser completed the contract troubles of the Reds.

Columbia, S. C., April 4.—Rookies Lee Handley and Hub Walker led a four-hit, ninth-inning rally today that netted the Cincinnati Reds three runs and a 5-to-4 victory over the Champion Detroit Tigers.

Trailing from the first inning, when singles by Clifton and Simmons and a double by Greenberg gave the Tigers two runs, the Reds, led by Lew Riggs and William Campbell, hammered away at Pitcher Roxie Lawson until doubles by Handley and Walker and a single by Kiki Cuyler forced Lawson from the box in the ninth.

Riggs then singled off Kimsey to bring Cuyler home from second with the winning run. Outfielder Fox, of Detroit, hit a home run in the fifth.

Portsmouth, Va., April 4.—Behind the five-hit pitching of George Earnshaw and Ed Brandt, the Brooklyn Dodgers easily defeated Portsmouth, of the Piedmont League, 6 to 0, in an exhibition game today.

Earnshaw held the minor leaguers to four hits the first four innings and then Brandt limited them to one safe blow in the last five frames.

Jacksonville, Fla., April 4.—Ivy Paul Andrews went the full nine innings for the St. Louis Browns today in their 8-4 victory over the Baltimore Orioles in an exhibition game here.

The Brownies countered Baltimore's three-run attack in the second with four runs in the third to win their eleventh game in 16 in the Grapefruit League.

Knoxville, Tenn., April 4.—George Puccinelli slammed out three home runs today to lead the Athletics in a hitting barrage that defeated Knoxville, of the Southern Association, 16 to 3.

The American Leaguers gathered five homers, a triple, and three doubles behind six-hit pitching by Bill Dietrich and Woody Upchurch. Knoxville used three hurlers.

Memphis, Tenn., April 4.—The New York Giants found the Memphis Chicks of the Southern Association in a slugging mood today and had to be content with an 8-8 draw after darkness halted hostilities at the end of the thirteenth inning. It was the first time in 23 exhibitions this spring that the Giants had been forced into an overtime game.

The Giants made 18 hits, half of them in the first two innings, when they scared seven runs off their old teammate, Lefty Jim Mooney. The Chicks got 22 safe blows off Clydell Castleman and Harry Gumbert, however, putting together ten in the third and fourth frames to tie the score.

Montgomery, Ala., April 4.—The Chicago Cubs, lacing Curt Davis for seven hits and six runs in four innings, trimmed the Philadelphia Nationals, 11 to 1 here today. Davis, in addition to being ineffective, issued seven passes and hit one batsman before being relieved by Bowman. Lee went the route for the Cubs, allowing eight hits.

Cooper Adds 69 and Takes Lead of 5 Strokes at Augusta

Jones Duplicates 78 as Halfway Is Reached; 'All Over Course.

Cruickshank and Shute Second; Wood and Sarazen Gets 67s.

By Alan Gould,
Associated Press Sports Editor.

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 4.—Galloping along in the midst of a terrific attack on par, marked by two record-equaling rounds, "Lighthorse Harry" Cooper, Chicago professional, increased his lead to five strokes today over an all-star field at the 36 hole, or halfway mark, in the $5,000 Augusta National Invitation Golf tournament.

While renowned Bobby Jones again failed dismally to recapture his scoring touch, duplicating his first round 78 for a total of 156 to pass out of the competitive picture, his professional rivals took advantage of milder weather, plus vastly better playing conditions, to take the Jones-designed course apart.

Jones, all over the course, wound up the day exactly 17 shots behind the fast-flying Cooper, who added a sub 69 to his previous 70 for a total of 139. "Lighthorse Harry," shooting the works, barely missed trimming several strokes off his course record.

Shakes Off His Rivals.

He shook off his closest rivals, meanwhile, and found himself still riding high, wide and handsome, with Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va., and Denny Shute, of Boston, the former British Open champion, nearest at 144 each.

Cruickshank, barely missing five putts, added a 69 to his previous 75. Shute, dropping four putts of 8 to 20 feet for birdies, tacked a 68 to his initial 76.

A dozen professionals registered scores of par or better with Gene Sarazen, the 1935 tournament winner, and Craig Wood, of New York, the victim of Gene's famous "double eagle" last year, exploding a pair of 67's to equal the competitive course record, set a year ago by Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa.

Wood's five under par performance was a dazzling recovery from his first round 88, the weirdest performance of them all. Determined to redeem himself, Wood was out in 33, with the aid of an eagle 3 on the 500-yard eighth. With any real luck on the greens he would have finished with a 65 or 66 for a new competitive course record. He three-putted the thirteenth and missed two short ones, including a putt of less than a yard on the home hole.

Never over par, Wood had three birdies in addition to his eagle, but his amazing performance in knocking 21 strokes off his previous day's score still left him far behind Cooper, with a 36-hole total of 155

Sarazen in Rally.

Sarazen's brilliant rally, after touring the course in yesterday's frigid gale with Jones in 78, pulled the Connecticut farmer up to a tie with a handful of others for fourth place, with 145, 6 strokes behind Cooper, but very much in the running.

Gene didn't have any "double eagles" in his bag, but he scored an eagle 3 on the long eighth, where he put his second wood shot within 3 feet of the cup. He had four birdies, due mainly to the effectiveness of his chip shots, and was over par on only one hole, the fourth, which he three-putted. He was wild with his long irons, but had six one-putt greens.

For the benefit of a gallery of upward of 3,000 spectators, including Ambassador Hirosi Saito of Japan, who flew from Washington especially to see his two young countrymen, Chick Chin and Torchy Toda, perform, the professionals put on a great scoring show. Seven cracked 70, with Paul Runyan and

Dunlap Takes North-South Golf Crown 4th Time in Row

By the United Press.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 4.—George Dunlap, stylish New York internationalist, today further established himself as one of the world's finest amateur golfers, when he won the annual North and South amateur championship for the fourth year in succession.

Dunlap's victim today was Acquialla Giles, of New York, and the score was 8 and 7. He rolled over the handsome Manhattan Club player just as easily as he did his other final round opponents in 1931, 1933, 1934 and 1935.

George's earlier triumphs here were scored on sand greens, on which he was a marvel, and, when the sand was replaced by grass this year, his friends feared for his putting touch. But he mastered the grass just as completely.

Dunlap toured the long and tricky No. 2 course in 73, one over par, on the morning round to go into lunch five-up. This made the afternoon round a mere formality, for there isn't an amateur living who can spot Dunlap a five-hole advantage and lick him.

On the last 18 holes, Dunlap, with a clinching lead, slackened his pace and was five over fours on the 11 holes played. This was good enough to hold Giles safely in check, however, for the New York clubman played very erratically, just as he did in the first round.

He started with a six to go six down, but won the third and fourth with a pair of fours against a brace of sixes by his opponent. Dunlap quickly pulled himself together, however, and won the fifth, seventh, ninth and eleventh for the match.

The feature of the match was Dunlap's magnificent putting on the first round. He was continually running down long ones, and even when he missed the 20 or more footers, he came so close as to make the gallery of several hundred gasp.

Tropical Feature To Bright Plumage

Tropical Park, Fla., April 4 (AP).—Bright Plumage, stout hearted son of Macaw and Beaming which is pointed to bear the colors of Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney in the Kentucky Derby, raced to a handy victory in the second running of the derby consolation stakes, the mile and a half furlong feature of the final racing program of the 96-day Florida season witnessed by 18,000 at Tropical Park this afternoon.

Mrs. P. A. B. Widener 2nd's Dnieper, the favorite and another candidate for the Kentucky Derby as a running mate for Brevity, was second. The Kiev gelding finished two lengths and a half back of the dusky coated Whitney colt and a length and a half in advance of W. J. Hirsch's Columbiana, the only filly in the field of five 3-year-olds.

Miss Dean Wins Tennis Title At Houston

Mrs. Van Ryn Is Beaten in Finals; Men's Play Delayed.

By the Associated Press.

HOUSTON, Tex., April 4.—Miss Eunice Dean, of San Antonio, captured the women's title of the sixth annual River Oaks tennis tournament today by defeating Mrs. Marjorie Gladman Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, fifth ranking feminine player in the nation last year. The scores were 4—6, 6—3, 7—5.

Miss Dean's victory over the national indoor titleholder and fifth ranking player in the United States in 1935, was the second startling upset which she had provided. She gained the finals through a straight set victory over Mrs. Mary Greef Harris, of Kansas City, ranked seventh last year.

In the decisive set, Miss Dean broke Mrs. Van Ryn's service after the eleventh game had been deuced twice and then won the match on her own service.

The men's semifinals were postponed until tomorrow because of the dismal, damp weather. Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, defending champion, will meet J. Gilbert Hall, of East Orange, N. J., and Wilmer Allison, of Austin, captain of the United States Davis Cup Team, will face young Hal Surface, of Kansas City.

Detroit Hockey Club Seeks Title

Red Wings Hope to Give City 'Grand Slam.'

By the United Press.

Detroit, April 4.—Detroit's chances of scoring a grand slam in major professional sports trophies for the 1935-36 season rested tonight on the flashing blades of the Detroit Red Wings, National Hockey League champions.

Urged on by fans, who for the first time in modern sports history know the thrill of possessing the world's baseball championship and the profesional football title, the Red Wings take the ice tomorrow night against the Toronto Maple Leafs, determined to add the Stanley cup to the already imposing list of titles that has gained for Detroit recognition as the "city of champions."

If successful in the best-three-out-of-five game series, the Wings will make history, for never in the many years of Stanley cup competition has a Detroit team won the trophy emblematic of hockey supremacy.

Mike Belloise Winner On Technical K. O.

Chicago, April 3 (AP).—Mike Belloise, sensational New York featherweight, defeated Everette Rightmire, Sioux City, Iowa, in the fourteenth round of their scheduled 15-round battle tonight on a technical knockout.

Bright Light Runs Remarkable Race to Win Bowie Feature

15,000 Watch Day's Card At Track

Daily Double Returns $148.20 on Wiggle In, Time Piece.

Graysteel Handicap, the day's secondary feature. Flying the Araho Stable's white dots on black, New Deal gave his backers no anxious moments, assuming the lead after a wrestle with Peradventure and then drawing away at the end. Lynx Eye put on a closing rush that brought second money. Galmica, prominent all the way, was third in the field of nine. New Deal, third in the inaugural, paid a $9.20 mutuel. Jockey W. Ray turned in a masterful saddle assignment.

Trainer Bobby Curran made it a "double" for the day by sending The Singer out to win the day's finale at an $8.00 mutuel. Curran, who owns this horse also, is the trainer of New Deal. Billowy Wave and Canimar were second and third in the distance event.

Timepiece, representing the Sage stable, got the longshot players off to a flying start in the first race by taking an easy decision from Prosy and Nalita J. in the field of nine. With Jockey Bobby Merritt in the saddle, Timepiece broke slowly, came to the outside in the stretch and bounced past his rivals with plenty of daylight to spare at the end. Lotofus, the favorite, was away on top, but lost her chance by swinging wide entering the stretch. The winner paid $20.

Veteran Portden Wins.

Portden, ancient son of The Porter, proved the first horse to win two races at the meeting. Urged by Jack Westrope, Portden assumed the lead when Bacon quit and continued gamely under a drive to stave off the closing rush of Sang Froid. Third in the field of six competing over the three-quarter-mile course was Hoops, which put on a closing rush from a slow beginning. The winner was well played at a $6.30 mutuel.

Wiggle In, whose mama was Wiggle Waggle, turned on a burst of speed in the stretch to take the third race at a $9.60 mutuel. Hiatus, the pace-setter from the Vanderiblt barn, tired nearing the finish but saved the place money. Canrock was a distant third. Apprentice Jockey I. Anderson rode the winner and turned in an excellent performance.

Favorite players sank with Our Ship in the fourth race. The son of Constitution had not been to the post since last year and despite the question of whether or not he was shipshape, the bettors went to him in a big way. He finished last in the field of five. Rollick, at $18.30, rollicked to the wire ahead of Happy Eastern and Secured. Rollick set the pace most of the way and was capably piloted by apprentice Jockey Cliff Stafford, who arrived from Florida yesterday.

Turn On Scores In Hunt Club Meeting

Capt Carson's Mount Wins 2 Events in Hunter Trials in Md.

TURN ON, veteran show ring star of Capt. Marion Carson, held the spotlight at the Riding and Hunt Club's fifth annual hunter trials staged before a gallery of some 1,000 spectators at Bradley Farms, Md., yesterday afternoon.

The gray mare, who has proven her worth in the ring, hunt field, and at polo as well, took first place in the Chevy Chase Plate competition, open to all-comers hunted at least three times with an organized pack, and then repeated in the Master's Plate, open to hunters owned and ridden by members of an organized pack.

Capt. Carson had the mount on his premier performer in both classes and was given a tremendous ovation when the blue ribbons were pinned into the bridle of his entry after two brilliant performances over the stiff 2-mile course.

The trials proved to be a walkaway for people from service circles.

Mrs. Forrest Sherman, wife of Lieut. Comdr. Sherman, U. S. N., won the Riding and Hunt Club Plate, a special contest limited to members of the local organization and their mounts. My Lass, coupled with Easter Morn, ridden by Capt. William Wyman, accounted also for the Montgomery County Plate, for pairs of hunters owned and ridden by members of an organized hunt.

A team from Fort Myer won the only other class on the program, the Potomac Plate competition, for teams of three hunters. The winning entry was composed of Eye's Delight, Johnson and Tom Lewis, ridden by Lieut. Joseph Gonahl, Lieut. Weber and Lieut. L. H. Wyman.

Detroit Promoter Would Purge And Uplift Wrestling Industry

By the United Press.

DETROIT, April 4.—Nick Londes, Detroit's impresario of promotion, tonight announced opening of his campaign to purify the wrestling industry.

This benevolent movement, according to Londes, will help raise the grunt-and-groan profession to a high standard by eliminating "the gorillas, mustachioed fakers, bearded beasts and small-fry wrestlers" who, he said, are running the sport into the ground.

The Detroit promoter, whose endeavors range from pugilism to grand opera, has requested the National Wrestling Association to sanction a professional tournament, to be held in Detroit "from now until we clean out the fakes."

Londes' present plans call for a tournament, with matches to be held weekly (if necessary) among wrestlers who think they can last 10 minutes in a gym workout with some of the present-day chieftains of the industry.

Londes' plans were revealed following the suspension this week of Dick Shikat, recognized world heavyweight champion, by the Michigan Athletic Commission. Shikat also has been barred in Indiana and Tennessee for failing to show up for contracted exhibitions. He is the No. 1 nomination on the Detroit promoter's list of small-fry wrestlers.

"Any wrestler who jumps dates and is always complaining about the so-called wrestling trust is a disgrace to the sport," Nick insisted.

Deep Run Trophy To Ghost Dancer

toric Curles Neck course near here today.

Fair skies smiled down the brilliant green turf of the James River Valley farm as 5,000 persons crowded the bleacher seats and lined the rails to witness the running of six races by a small but select field.

Virginians, whose ancestors had followed the sport in this same country from colonial days, together with horse-lovers from all parts of the East and South, thrilled as four entries in a field of six in the feature race battled furiously for the lead.

Ghost Dancer kept well behind for two-thirds of the distance with Escape pacing the field, followed closely by Sporting Print and Pontoon. With only two brush jumps to go, Laing pushed his mount past Sporting Print and gained an edge on Pontoon at the next jump. Escape and Ghost Dancer soared as one horse over the final brush barrier and the Palmer entry pulled far into the lead on the home stretch as Richard K. Mellon's horse weakened under the grueling test.

Mrs. Francis P. Garvan's Sporting Print came in second with P. Edmunds up, and Charioteer, owned by Anderson Fowler and ridden by the owner, who like Ghost Dancer, come from behind in the closing moments of the race, was the third to flash by the judges' stand. The time for the winner was 6 minutes, 38 2-5 seconds.

Hoyas in Debut This Week, Md. On Road

Maryland Nine Is to Play Conference Foes on Virginia Trip.

GEORGETOWN'S diamond debut, and Maryland's four-day invasion of Virginia that will go far toward determining the Terrapins' status in the Southern Conference family, feature the week's collegiate sports program, a somewhat anemic list that has been retarded because of the annual Easter holiday.

George Washington's three ball games with Delaware, Penn State and Western Maryland occupy the top billing for stay at homes. Georgetown opens its season Wednesday at the Hilltop in a game with Western Maryland and immediately retires from the scene to emerge after the holidays when the real campaign begins.

The week also brings Maryland's track and lacrosse teams into action, but even the trackmen will do their stuff on foreign fields. Thursday finds Geary Eppley's pupils matching strides with V. P. I. on the Gobbler's cinderpath, with racing to be resumed Friday against V. M. I. at Lexington. Both meets should test the Old Liners' mettle severely. The lacrosse team faces the Alumi Saturday at College Park.

Maryland's baseball trip carries the Terps first into Richmond on Wednesday, and on the following days to Virginia, Washington and Lee, and V. M. I.

George Washington, with two straight victories under its collective belt and far-reaching ambitions in its collective head, is gunning for a clean-sweep of its program. Warmer weather should aid the Colonials and if they swing into their real stride it looks like an undefeated season for Ccaoh Ed Morris and his men.

Bettors Favor Coldstream In Derby

Performances Last Year Attract Louisville Race Fans' Eye.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 4.—Although Joseph E. Widener's Brevity and Hal Price Headley's Hollyrood continue to rule first and second choices, respectively, for the Kentucky Derby, many followers of the turf in this vicinity still are faithful to C. B. Shaffer's Coldstream. They believe that when the big race is run Saturday, May 2, the son of Bull Dog will prove himself the great thoroughbred his appearance and performances at Churchill Downs last spring seemed to indicate.

There never was a finer looking 2-year-old than Coldstream when he made his first public appearance in a purse race at Churchill Downs April 30 last year. Coldstream showed high speed and went into the lead, but bore out in the stretch and in a bumping match lost by a head to Black Highbrow.

It was in his second effort under colors, on Derby Day, that Coldstream showed what he really could do. In an allowance race at 4½ furlongs he ran away from his field, including Black Highbrow, and won by four lengths in 0:52 2-5, a new track record. He displayed the same brand of speed to capture the Bashford Manor Stakes by five lengths.

In-and-Out Performances Baffle.

Coldstream then was shipped East, where began his in-and-out performances. He won his first start at Belmont Park, lost a couple of races, won, lost, won, lost. It was in his defeats that Coldstream looked so bad that many who had sung his praises weakened on him.

But his victories afforded just as strong an argument on the other side of the question. They were so impressive that his followers insisted that in defeat he clearly had not run his race.

One of Coldstream's most brilliant efforts was in the Saratoga Special in which he and C. V. Whitney's Red Rain ran a dead heat. In this event Coldstream proved his gameness. He came from far back after having been in close quarters during the earlier running, slipped between the leaders entering the final eighth and closed courageously on even terms with Red Rain.

His triumph in the Hyde Park Stakes at Arlington Park was just as spectacular. Off eighteenth in a tangle and on the extreme outside, he worked his way to the front to win by a nose.

Coldstream's admirers point to these races as indicative of his gameness. His bad races they can't explain. But they believe that if he runs as he did in his good races he will win the Kentucky Derby. And they believe he will run that way.

Coldstream has wintered well at Mr. Shaffer's Coldstream Stud near Lexington. He received enough shed work through the cold months to keep him in fine trim and his early gallops have brought him along to the point where there is no question as to his being fit on Derby Day.

The son of Bull Dog is in the able hands of Trainer Alex Gordon, who claims that Coldstream is the best 3-year-old he ever has had in his care. Gordon believes he has a probable Kentucky Derby winner, and many Kentuckians are stringing along with him.

Phil Furr to Risk District Welterweight Crown Tuesday Night

Wright Foe At Turner's Arena

Former Stablemates to Meet Again, but in Different Roles.

AN OLD feud, that started in a training ring, will be settled at Turner's Arena next Tuesday night when Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, risks his crown in a 15-round encounter with Cary Wright, another local product.

There is an honest-to-goodness grudge between these two young fisticuffians. It all started when they were members of the same fighting stable, then operated by Harry Groves.

At that time Wright was the star of the organization. He was fighting semifinals and main bouts while Phillip could do no better than four or six round preliminaries. Then it was quite customary for Cary to punch holes in his less efficient stablemate in the training ring. Naturally enough, Phillip liked this not one little bit.

Found Himself.

Suddenly Furr "found himself," in the parlance of the prize ring. He began bowling over opponent after opponent until he found himself firmly established at the top of the local welterweight heap. This, of course, irked Wright not a little bit.

The Groves Stable busted up and Wright began bidding for a fight with Furr, who by then had punched his way to the District title.

"I've licked that Furr three times a day in training," insisted Wright, "and I can do the same thing in an actual fight."

"Get yourself a reputation," demanded Furr, cracking the whip mightily.

Wright started after his reputation and banged his way to a bout with Bob Wilson, then Furr's closest rival. Wilson's converted southpaw style proved too much for Wright and Bobby practically murdered Cary. Wright went into a long retirement, while Furr kept fighting.

One fine day Wright decided he was ready to return to the ring, with the avowed purpose of finally working up to a bout with Furr. Since then he has won ten straight fights—and has the "reputation" Furr advised him to get. He is quite confident that he still can take the measure of Phillip even as he used to in the training ring.

"Furr can only hurt you with pot shots," he explains. "He can't take pot shots at me because I'll be taking the fight to him all the time—crowding him and shooting both hands to the stomach where he doesn't like it. After a few rounds of that, Furr will be so tired and weak I'll let him take all the pot shots he wants to. They won't be any good by then."

Bob Wilson, the Florida knockerout, will tackle one Jack Duffy, a Baltimore knockerout, in a semifinal scheduled for eight rounds. In a six-round preliminary, Irish Johnny Dean will engage Manny Wibble.

In a brace of four-rounders Chester Ruby will tackle Al Dintaman and Harry Thompson will swap swats with Jack Robinson.

The program has been moved back to Tuesday from the regular Monday night date because of a Jewish holiday.

Chapman Gives Up; Signs With Yanks

By the United Press.

Atlanta, April 4.—Ben Chapman, New York Yankee outfielder and longest holdout in the club's history, announced tonight he will sign a contract Monday.

Chapman telephoned Manager Joe McCarthy from his Birmingham home and said he would report in Nashville on Monday. He had refused to accept a cut of $2,000 from last year's salary of $12,000.

Chapman, it was said, will sign a contract for $10,000 in salary and a bonus of $2,000, which will be contingent not on a stiplated batting average but will be paid on McCarthy's recommendation.

Johnson, 18-year-old Columbia Country Club champion, scored a 78 in routing Claude McManus, 7 and 6.

Tom Dwyer featured the scoring for the Wildcats with a 79.

Georgetown won the best ball in both matches by 4 and 2.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

MR. James M. Brown,
Chairman, Executive Committee,
National Boxing Association.

Dear Brownie:

Honestly, if it weren't for the frequent crackpot outbursts from your organization, the New York State Athletic Commission, Coral Gables outfit and similar groups, I don't know how we boxing writers would be able to provide our readers with a laugh or two, now and then.

Last week, or instance, was very dull. Hardly a thing had happened in the face-lifting racket and it seems inevitable that this space today would be filled with another of the apparently endless stream of Joe Louis columns.

Then, along came the quarterly rankings of your association. Eureka!

There are at least three large guffaws in the way you rank the heavyweights. Of course, no one would dispute your ranking of James J. Braddock as champion, with Joe Louis No. 1 contender. Even though I personally think Louis will beat Braddock (but only after the fight of his life), James J. fought his way into the championship and should be rated the best there is until otherwise proven.

Laugh No. 1.

Laugh No. 1 lies in your ranking Max Schmeling No. 3 on the list. Sure enough, Der Deutsches Max is meeting Joe Louis in June, but that's no reason for pushing him so far up in the scoring. I know and everybody else in the fight racket knows and you boys should know that Schmeling is as washed up as the Potomac flood area. If Max goes more than a round with Louis, I shall be the most surprised person in the world—and don't forget I'm the saperoo who picked Natie Brown to whip Joe, conceded Levinsky and Retzlaff a chance and took 10 to 1 on Paolino against the Sepia sudden death.

Laugh No. 2 in the heavyweight rankings comes when one sees Primo Carnera ranked seventh. Marty Gallagher will whip Da Preem three times a day and four times on Sundays, but you haven't ranked our Marty. You have put that big, nice, but ineffectual palooka, Ray Impellettiere, in eighth place. Marty already has disposed of him, which should call for some kind of comment.

You seem to have done all right by the light-heavyweights ranking John Henry Lewis at the top, closely followed by Jock McAvoy and Al McCoy and not putting any obvious phonies in the first ten, but there's another big laugh down in the middleweight division.

Who in the world ever told you that Eddie (Babe) Risko, was the best of the 165-pounders? He has been bounced around like a tennis ball by this pug and that stumblebum ever since he outfumbled Teddy Yarosz, but that's no reason why you people should keep on calling him "champ." Everybody else quit it months ago.

Lou Brouillard, Freddie Steele and Ken Overlin, whom you rank second, third and fourth, respectively, are pretty much on a par, so I guess there can be no quarrel with you on that score, but I think if I had to take my choice of one of this group, I'd take Overlin. I can't imagine any but one of the greatest shellacking Ken.

What has this Jack Carroll ever done to deserve the No. 2 spot in the welterweight division? I know he is the Australian champion and that he is fighting Barney Ross soon, but how come he can be run around Jimmy McLarnin, whom I thought won the last bit of business in that farce comedy in which the 145-pound crown was tossed back and forth so many times. Bep Van Klavern, who is allotted the fifth spot in the welterweight lineup, is getting pretty old for all that responsibility, isn't he?

Bad on Figures.

How can you figure Wesley Ramey No. 1 contender for Tony Canzoneri's 135-pound diadem when Wesley had the daylights whaled out of him just last Monday by Leonard Del Genio, who has been relegated to fourth spot, below Lew Ambers?

You've got a lot of other funny things in your rankings, but I guess my customers have had their monthly laugh by now and I'll sign off before they get hysterics. Trusting that your organization will follow up the next ridiculous decision of the New York solons of sock with something that will bring forth the abdominal guffaws expected, I remain,

Yours with love and kisses,
WILLIE.

Gallico . .

Fears Military Demonstration at Olympic Games.

By Paul Gallico,
A Special Correspondent.

SALCOMBE, Devonshire, England, April 4.—Dear Brother Miley:

The only pangs of jealousy I have experienced since I left home and the column came when I read yours in which you called the New York Boxing Commission "Winken, Blinken and Nod."

I wish I had thought of that. That's even better than the late Bill McGeehan's "Three Dumb Dukes." Maybe you'd like to have a couple of days off to play some golf, or think up some new names for things. And inasmuch as the folks at home while thinking about those Olympic games in Berlin pretty soon, I thought I might chuck in my 5 cents worth (tuppence, ha'penny where I live now) and give the folks back home an idea of what to expect from Unter Den Linden when the young men get on their marks.

It's going to be just lovely, John-o, because the Germans have acquired a national rudeness that is simply marvelous. And furthermore, they can't take it. And still furthermore, they won't. Since communicating with the office with reference to the stuff I sent out of Garmisch, I have discovered that apparently anything I sent that criticized the running of the winter games of Der Fuehrer was simply filed in the waste basket in Garmisch.

Believe it or not, or put it as you will, but the price of popularity at the winter games was the old stiff arm for Hitler. If you slipped it to him, you were a great guy, and if you didn't they hoped you'd lose. The boys and girls might as well know it so as to make up their minds whether they will or they won't when they face Der Fuehrer in Berlin.

YOU know Jack, I believe in being polite and exchanging courtesies. If the Germans will stand up when the Star Spangled Banner is played, or take off their hats when our flag goes by as we do. I am perfectly willing to return the courtesy and raise my right arm when their flag is carried past, or hold it up until it feels like dropping off while they play through two national anthems.

But I couldn't stick the personal salutes of the athletes to Caesar during the games, and I sent a story from Garmisch wondering how a man of Hitler's intelligence could play the part of such a bad host by making his guests feel uncomfortable. And he certainly made some of our kids feel very much so. He attended the pair skating and sat in the honor tribune, really like Caesar with his court. All the big shots were there with him—Goering, Goebels and the whole mob.

The contestants came onto the ice, faced the tribune and gave the salute, then faced the other way and did it again. When our kids came on and did likewise, some of us beat it around back to find out what the hell, and whether they had been ordered to do so, and who had done the ordering.

I GOT my dope from Maribel Vinson, our national figure skating champion, who told me that the Americans noticed that all the contestants who performed before them were saluting Hitler, and that they sent out to inquire of the officials whether they had to do it likewise. The officials said it was not compulsory, but that everybody was doing it, etc., etc. Well our kids are no dopes. They knew if they didn't do it they'd get a frost from the crowd—the Germans sat on their hands, anyway, any time our gang performed, and a frosty crowd doesn't do your skating any good, or the marks of the judges either.

Anyway, our kids gave Hitler the business and hated doing it and I wrote that if he were a right guy, and these games were really just an international sports meeting, he would have refused to accept salutes, would have attended the games unostentatiously and said: "Don't mind me, I'm just one of the spectators." Well, I wrote all that, but the office tells me that not a line of it got through. At the same time, it should be mentioned in farness to the Germans that they stood and gave the Hitler salute any time the Star Spangled Banner was played, or our flag was carried past.

I wrote all this, in good faith, along with praise of the organization and handling of the games, and handed it in at the telegraph desk to be filed to Paris and thence to the United States. The oil got through all right, but any time the rap was in, the boys simply dropped it into the fur-lined waste basket.

STRANGE people, those Germans. They move heaven and earch to get the Olympic games, invite correspondents from all over the world to come and cover them and then censor the copy. Did a single line get over of the story I wrote about the time that Hitler attended a hockey game and soldiers locked 10,000 people in the stadium, barred all gates, refused to recognize press passes and correspondents anxious to get out and file results and held every one there until Caesar had made his exit?

And that same day they also barred all avenues of approach to the stadium, with police, soldiers and Pegler's gardeners until Hitler should have made his entrance. Result: Crush and panic at the gates, with ticket holders trying to get in, as they were entitled, and the military barring the way. It will be twice as bad in Berlin.

And that closing day! The field artillery that banged away up in the mountains was, I think, an official part of the ceremony because I remember guns going off in Los Angeles, too, but that little army of guys in gray-green uniforms and coal scuttle hats that lined the ski stadium was not. It was a jolly good military demonstration, and nothing more. And having got away with it in Garmisch, it will be double that, at least, in Berlin. And so will be the rudeness and the "Hail, Caesar, we who are about to die salute thee," stuff.

The games went on a political basis from the very start when the athletes marched into the stadium and past Herr Hitler. What a roar went up from the crowd when the French and the Austrians gave the Hitler salute, obviously a political gesture, especially the Austrians, as Austria and Germany had had a mad on and the border was closed. Our guys merely took their hats off and did eyes right as they went past which was sort of silly, too, I thought, and the salute, inasmuch as it was the first greeting of a ruler-host would have left us no worse off in dignity, and certainly better off in feeling and friendship.

WELL, that's off the chest, Jawn. I must go out now and arrange with Operatives Q33 and C14 about smuggling my copy out of Germany this summer. Though, you know, I read some of that stuff that got through when it appeared in the paper, and it wasn't so hot. Maybe the Germans had the right idea after all and aren't censors but merely critics.

Radiophoto: Cambridge Crew Wins Classic

Wide World Radiophoto.

This photo, radioed from London to New York and rushed to Washington via telephoto, shows the Cambridge crew on the left, pulling away from its ancient rival, Oxford, in the spurt that gave the Cantabs their thirteenth consecutive victory in the long rivalry between the schools.

Oxford's Crew Defeated by Cambridge

Suffers 13th Consecutive Defeat After Losing Early Advantage.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 4.—Cambridge's beer-drinking oarsmen breezed to their thirteenth consecutive vcitory over Oxford's milkfed huskies today in the eighty-eighth renewal of Great Britain's blue-ribbon intercollegiate rowing classic.

Their crushing defeat, by five lengths, left the Oxonians almost in despair of ever realizing their war-cry, "stop this rot," referring to the Cantabs' unbroken string of victories dating back to 1923.

Oxford's sweep-swingers gave up foaming beer for the first time this year in favor of milk for the training table although they had shifted to champagne for a final filip on the eve of the race. The dietary change, however, made no difference in the final result.

For the first half of the back-breaking 4¼-mile pull through the choppy waters of the Thames, the inexperienced Oxfords made a desperate, valiant bid to end Cambridge's streak. From the banks of the river where perhaps a half million had gathered came a thunderous ovation as the dark blues, their blades flashing like mad, shot to the front for a half length lead at Hammersmith Bridge.

Then the Cantabs went out and really began to pull. Stroked by the veteran, W. R. G. M. Laurie, hailed as one of the finest oarsmen developed in England in modern times, Cambridge boosted its pace to a 39 beat and left the dark blues flailing water far in the Cantab's wake.

So unanimous was the desire for an Oxford victory that Cambridge, every man fresh, crossed the finish line amid a strange hush.

Cambridge's time of 21 minutes, 6 seconds was well behind the course record of 18:03 established by the Cantabs in 1934. Oxford's time was 21:24.

Rowing critics were trying tonight to solve the mystery of Oxford's repeated setbacks. They noted the dark blues seemed to be out for a rubber-neck tour for they violated the cardinal rule of keeping their eyes on the boat. But they might as well have enjoyed the passing scenery. They never had a chance after the Cantabs got warmed up.

Hagen Late Again; Ambassador Waits

'Sir Walter' Keeps Hirosi Saito Waiting at Tee.

Augusta, Ga., April 4.—Walter Hagen, one of golf's most colorful campaigners with a well-known habit of being late at the first tee, kept the Japanese ambassador, Hirosi Saito, and the Japanese professional champion, "Torchy" Toda, waiting today—but not intentionally.

"Torchy" and "The Haig" were due to start at 12:30. The ambassador had just arrived, greeted his golfing compatriots and was escorted to the starting tee, All was in readiness a few minutes ahead of time, except Hagen. Finally "Sir Walter" looking his nattiest, strolled out, apologized and the "international" incident was ended. They teed off at 12:34.

The ambassador watched Chick Chin as well as Toda play, chatted with newspapermen and expressed his delight at seeing some of the finest golf so far played in the tournament here. He plans to see the finals tomorrow.

Chin and Toda, rallying to the occasion, both shot 74's for the day's round and improved their positions.

Sharkey Wins Prep School Medal

Gonzaga's Golf Captain Scores an 82 at Garrett Park.

BUDDY SHARKEY, 16-year-old Gonzaga Prep golf captain, won the medal with an 82 in the Georgetown Prep School invitation tournament yesterday at the Garrett Park course, and established himself as the favorite to win the championship.

With the course slow and a high wind prevailing, Sharkey negotiated each nine in 41. Par is 70.

Dick Meyer, 15-year-old St. John's captain, was next with 83. Eric King, of St. Alban's posted an 85, and DeSales Powell of Georgetown Prep, an 87.

By virtue of Sharkey's low score, Gonzaga won the team championship, with St. John's second.

Match play will start this morning at 10:30. The medalist meets Jackie Dettweiler, of the host school, in the opening round. Jackie is the brother of last year's champion, Billy, now a freshman at Georgetown University.

Sharkey's card and pairings follow:

Eastern Gets 4 On All-Star Teams

Local Cagers Dominate Tourney Fives; Win 'Consolation' Tilt.

By John R. Vosburgh.
A Staff Correspondent.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., April 4. Eastern High School players of Washington completely dominated the all-tournament teams selected by newspapermen at the conclusion of the seventeenth annual Eastern States basketball tournament here tonight.

Although the tourney title, last year the property of the District five, went to their victors, Brown Prep, of Philadelphia, by virtue of a final-round, 29-28 victory over White Plains, N. Y., High, four Eastern tossers were included among the chosen 10.

Lanky Lavelle (Dope) Dean, who scored 31 points in three games, was named on the All-Star quintet for the second straight year. Along with Capt. Johnny Wise, chunky leader of Brown Prep. Wise and Dean were the only members of last year's All-Tournament team to be selected a second year.

Hollidge, Shaner, Scheible Named.

Charles (Chick) Hollidge, Eastern's other beanpole veteran, was chosen as one of the first team forwards. Buddy Shaner, despite obvious handicap of wrist and ankle injuries distinguished himself enough to get the second team center selection.

Henry (Reds) Scheible, Eastern's happy-go-lucky guard, was the fourth Eastern player to crash the honor ranks, getting the second-team call largely on the basis of his 18 points rolled up in the "consolation" encounter with La Sale Academy, of New York.

No other team in the tournament came close to rivaling Eastern as the source of All-Tournament material. Brown Prep with men and White Plains (N. Y.) High, the two finalists, each placed two among the first 10.

Eastern Conquers La Salle.

Eastern preceded the championship tilt by winning a rather meaningless "consolation" encounter from La Salle Academy, New York City's crack Catholic team, 36 to 27.

In winning the "consolation" engagement, Eastern partially redeemed itself for its shady first-half showing against Brown's inspired team yesterday, with Reds Scheible sinking baskets in staccato style.

The red-headed guard scored 18 points for the finest individual scoring performance of the tourney. La Salle recovered somewhat in the third quarter and Eastern led only 25-20 as the last period started.

Dope Dean contributed largely, and Eastern won going away as he and Scheible tossed in one two-pointer after another.

Clayton Sheedy, Star of Decade Ago, Thinks Oldsters Better.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

IT'S a large brogan Georgetown students and supporters are asking the 1936 diamond contingent to fill when they begin comparing Ralph McCarthy's current collection of athletes to the team of 1922-23 that won 33 consecutive games and ruled the collegiate baseball world with a big bat for a sceptre.

Can Tommy Keating, Harry Bassin, Johnny Cavadine, Buddy Nau, Nick Nicketackus and others of this season equal the brilliant achievements of that glamorous, happy-go-lucky crowd of more than a decade ago? For our answer we went to a man well qualified to give it, Clayton Sheedy, first baseman of the 1922-23 teams and later a member of the Baltimore Orioles during their seven-pennant stretch in the International League.

Sheedy happened into the sports department in tow of Ed Sparrow, former sports editor of the Baltimore Sun and well-known turf writer. A tall, gaunt looking fellow, possessing enormous hands, a quiet New England brogue with a dash of Irish accent and a paragon of modesty, Sheedy frankly doesn't think the 1936 team, or any Georgetown team of the future will measure up to the one he played on.

23 Players Went to Majors.

He didn't say that in so many words, but he got over the impression in the quiet but enthusiastic manner in which he discussed the old days. Bassin and the others may be good, but how many will go up when they leave the Hilltop? That question is the crux of the matter. If all turn to organized baseball and make good at least in minors, there will be some basis for comparison and not before.

Sheedy reminesced for a moment and recalled that Paul Florence, catcher, signed with the Giants; Jack Flavin, who also played a mean game of football, went to Baltimore. Sam Hyman was signed by Detroit and later sent to Birmingham in the deal that brought Earl Whitehill to the Tigers. Art Reynolds and Bill Keynon, another Hoya football immortal, cast their fortunes with Toronto. Ed Taber was signed by the Phillies and Del Bissonette found favor in the eyes of all Brooklyn fans by his sterling work around first.

Senators Only Club to Beat Hoyas.

Washington was the only club to win over Georgetown in 1922, outscoring the collegians, 4-3, the day before the American League race opened. In that time every player on the team batted well over .300 and the better ones were hitting a .400 clip. It was not until the boys invaded Worcester for a game with Holy Cross in 1923 that their lengthy streak was interrupted.

One important factor in their favor was strong pitching, for the teams John D. O'Reilly coached had plenty of good hurling. McCarthy this season must depend almost wholly on Nicketakus, a nice looking southpaw, and hope some of the others come through with unexpected success.

Sheedy, incidentally will play with and manage the Department of Justice team this season. He was a member of the club last year when "Gook" Taylor managed. Next year he'll probably be just another player when the managerial toga is shifted to another's shoulders. It's one of those one-year affairs.

Sheedy was with Baltimore when the Orioles won the last three of their seven-straight pennants. He remembers one of the Little World Series games in Louisville—Baltimore won two with him at first—when he knocked a homer with the bases filled that won the game. That was his greatest thrill. But he still gets excited about hitting singles in a sandlot game. A hit's a hit, in the big show, minors or Governmental League.

Schwartz in Handball Victory, Takes Crown

Jack Schwartz, of the Jewish Community Center, easily defeated Wallace Winkler, 21-3 and 21-19, to win the District of Columbia Amateur Athletic Union handball championship yesterday in the Central Y. M. C. A. gym.

After a short rest Schwartz, paired with C. Silverman, also walked off with the doubles title by trouncing Winkler and Johnny Payne, 21-13 and 21-18.

Globe Refiners and Universal Clash at Tech High Tuesday

U. S. Olympic Finalists Booked

Kansans-Californians to Re-enact A.A.U. Titular Games in District.

By Dave Herman.

A RE-ENACTMENT of tonight's finals of the Olympic basketball tryouts between the Globe Refiners, of McPherson, Kans., and the Universal Pictures, of Hollywood, Calif., will take place Tuesday night in Washington at Tech High School's gymnasium.

Arrangements for the game between the National A. A. U. champions and the team they defeated in the national championship at Denver two weeks ago were completed last night by Winfree Johnson, District A. A. U. basketball chairman, a few hours after he arrived by plane from New York, where he witnessed the Olympic elimination contests at Madison Square Garden.

Tallest Court Team.

The Globe Refiners, tallest team in captivity, were so impressed with their reception last Tuesday during the game with Rinaldi Tailors that Gene Johnson, McPherson coach, expressed a desire to return. The Universal coach also welcomed the opportunity of bringing his rangy coast players here.

Before some 2,500 spectators the National Champions defeated Rinaldi, 57 to 35. They put on a real show.

In the A. A. U. finals at Denver, the Kansans, led by the 6-foot-8-inch All-American center, Joe Fortenberry, won, 47 to 35. Tonight Universal Pictures hope to reverse the tables.

McPherson last night defeated Washington State, 48 to 30, and Universal, a team sponsored by a group of movie stars, won from Wilmerding, Pa., Y. M. C. A., 42 to 29. Fourteen players from the two teams will make up the American squad which will compete in the Berlin Olympics.

who had totaled 1,081 last week. Ida, with 346 in singles, came back with 393 in her team set, which bettered her own mark by 30 pins.

Although bowing to Ida Simmons for the all-events crown, Mrs. Quigley holds high singles honors with 407.

Washington placed several teams among the leaders when the Progressive Printers, the last quint to step off the alleys for the night, shot 1,875 to take fourth place in the team event. Sam Simon was the top shooter with 435.

Washington's Bill Wood girls' team, with 1,698, moved into fourth place, while the Occidental Restaurant girls of the Capital City were holding fifth place with 1,694. The Lucky Strike girls of Washington held their lead with 1,762, tieing with their own record for the event established in 1934. The Norfolk Health Center threatened their lead by shooting 1,753.

Annetta Matthew and Pauline Ford, of Washington, took fifth place in doubles with 694.

Lorraine Gulli and Joe Freschi continue to top the mixed doubles with 737. The Baltimore duo of Frances Kreig and Johnny Miller shot 723 today to take second place, with Jack White and Ida Simmons rolling into third place with 712. Miller totaled 429 for his three strings. White rolled 390, with the Norfolk star turning in her lowest total of the day, 322.

Norfolk, Va., was chosen as the site for the 1937 congress by the executive committee. The 1936 congress officially opened today after having been delayed by the flood.

Officers elected included Charles O'Connell of Washington, president, to succeed John V. Dennis, of Norfolk; James Rintoul of Baltimore, first vice president; Albert Hosselton of Richmond, Va., third vice president; Alex J. Frank of Washington, treasurer.

Fails With Nats

DICK LANAHAN.

Nationals Drop Rookies in Shake-up

lacked control from the outset and in his every exhibition game effort was both wild and ineffective.

Despite their belief that Lanahan will yet recover his form, that stamped him as the cleverest young pitcher in the Southern Association last year, Manager Bucky Harris and Owner Clark Griffith are now rueing the day they refused the Cubs' offer of $30,000 for the young southpaw last season.

The release of Lanahan cuts the Nats' squad of pitchers to ten, the number Harris plans to carry throughout the season. Thus the staff will be comprised of Buck Newsom, Ed Linke, Earl Whitehill, Jimmy De Shong, Pete Appleton, Jack Russell, Monte Weaver, Henry Coppola, Joe Bokina and Kendall Chase.

Rated far below Lanahan when the team went into training, Bokina and Chase have come along rapidly to win places on the team. Bokina, a right-hander with far less 'stuff" than Lanahan, has cultivated a fast ball and has impressed Harris with his gameness under fire. Chase, like Lanahan, a southpaw, has shown definite signs of being able to cut the corners with the fastest curve ball outside of Buck Newsom's.

In Newsom, Ed Linke and Earl Whitehill, Harris believes he has a trio qualified to take regular turns in the box. He deems either Jimmy de Shong or Pete Appleton capable of becoming a fourth starting pitcher, with Henry Coppola, Jack Russell, Joe Bokina and Kendall Chase as distinct possibilities.

Fighting Irish Now Approve Basketball

Keogan, With Great Teams, Gives Lie to Rockne's Prediction.

NEW YORK, April 4.—It couldn't be done—even the great Knute Rockne hinted that—so George Keogan, the Minnesota farmer, did it.

He made football-minded Notre Dame basketball-conscious. Today, the familiar battlecry, "Cheer, cheer for old Notre Dame," echoes throughout the gymnasium rafters as well as over the nation's gridirons.

As the nation's leading coaches, here for their annual rules meeting, showered him with congratulations for producing probably the season's greatest college team, Keogan modestly backtracked his pioneering days and his winning fight to make basketball a big-time sport on the campus where football once was the only sport the fighting Irish knew.

"I'll never forget when I first began coaching basketball there 13 years ago," he grinned. "The game—and myself—were deep mysteries. We started out in the old gym, and our basketball floor was made of hard dirt. That first year was one that made you laugh one minute and wring your hands in despair the next.

"What did they do? They were so football-minded that whenever a player had the ball, the instinct was to tackle. Many of my finest prospects found themselves victimized by a hard and sure flying tackle. Looking back, I sometimes have a dark suspicion that Rockne told the boys that basketball afforded a fine chance for football drill. Yet Rockne, who used to say that basketball was for amusement purposes only, was my finest backer. If he doubted the sense of basketball, he never discouraged me."

Keogan had his trials for several seasons, but today his teams are mighty.

In 13 seasons at Notre Dame, his teams have compiled a winning percentage of .762 against the country's heaviest scoring machines. Last season they won 22 and lost but 2. During the last two seasons the team attracted approximately 237,000 spectators.

Pro Net Stars Will Play At Md. U.

BIG time professional tennis will be tried out at Ritchie Coliseum Thursday night, April 16, at Maryland University, when Ellsworth Vines, Lester Stoefen, Berkeley Bell and George M. Lott, jr., take the floor in singles and doubles exhibitions.

The big field house, which holds 4,000 spectators for the match, has a floor space and overhead suitable for the smashing play of the pros. With ample room to employ all manner of strokes, tennis fans and followers of big-time racquet play will be treated to one of the best exhibitions of hard-court play ever shown in this vicinity.

Perfectly lighted, the field house offers many advantages not experienced in matches played in Washington heretofore.

Vines will oppose Stoefen in singles and Lott will face Bell. In doubles, perhaps the most strenuous of the matches, Lott and Stoefen will oppose Vines and Bell.

Tickets for the matches will go on sale at Maryland and at Spaldings, in this city, the end of the week. Prices are scaled at $1.50, $1 and 50 cents, plus tax. The lowest priced seats are offered to school and college students.

Hartford Bows, 8 to 2, To Hampden-Sydney

Hampden-Sydney, Va., April 4 (AP).—Despite a bitter breeze that numbed fingers a well-organized Hampden-Sydney nine defeated the Haverford Quakers here today, 8 to 2.

The Tigers pounded the starting moundsman from the box in the middle of the third and used many substitutions after a safe lead had been piled up.

Reds Wear Red Pants In Their Night Games

Columbia, S. C., April 4 (AP).—Charlie Dressen, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, said here today members of his team would sport bright red pants for all seven night games scheduled for this season.

He said the scarlet pants were to make the players easily visible to the spectators as well as to lend an unusual note to the team's appearance.

"They said red pants look good at night," Dressen said.

Kenwood Match For Japan's Pros

Ambassador Saito Plans to Play Here Soon.

Japan's two golfing ambassadors, Torchy Toda and Chick Chin, are expected to appear in an exhibition match at Kenwood Golf and Country Club in the next few weeks.

Ambassador Hiroshi Saito, a golfing enthusiast, made a special trip to Augusta yesterday to see his two young countrymen match shots with the renowned Bob Jones and other American stars.

He plans to invite them to Washington. Indications are that Toda, Japan's open champion, and Chin will meet Wiffy Cox and another District pro, probably Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional. Toda and Chin played with the all-star Japan team when it tied the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. in an international match at Kenwood last spring.

To the great disappointment of his followers, Jones failed to join the general downward trend in scoring. The one-time world champion offered no excuses, other than to say he wasn't "hitting the ball" but it was plain to one and all that Bob has no chance to match shots with the money brigade by meeting them only once a year. His first two rounds represent the worst showing he has made in three "comebacks" here. He was no better than thirty-sixth in the field of 53 players, tied at 156 with the veteran Jock Hutchison, of Chicago, former British Open champion.

Where he controlled his tee shots beautifully in the high winds yesterday Jones was all over the premises today. He drove in the woods five times, including the tenth, where he took two to get out and then three-putted for a seven. He had birdies on both long holes of the inward nine, the thirteenth and fifteenth, but three-putted the eighteenth after being in the woods and a bunker. He had a total of 37 puts.

Trainer Is Suspended Following Dope Charge

Miami, Fla., April 4 (AP).—Joe Gorga, of Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., trainer of the horse, Move Faster, which finished last in his race March 23 at Tropical Park, has been suspended indefinitely and has been denied the privileges of the course, following the report of a saliva test taken of the horse which showed traces of cocaine, according to an announcement made by the Florida State Racing Commission after a hearing here today. Trainer Gorga was represented by counsel.

Municipal Golfers to Form District Association April 19

Fifty Already Signed Up By Burns

Beaver Dam's Schedule Released; 2 Pros in Relief Match.

FORMATION of a District Public Links Golf Association, which will take rank with the best in the country, will become a reality on April 19.

At 8:30 o'clock that night some 50 or 60 municipal golfers will meet at East Potomac's course to map out a constitution and by-laws, and arrange for a schedule of tournaments for the season.

Ed Burns, Rock Creek course manager, is the guiding spirit in the movement. Working in co-operation with him are S. G. Leoffler, local public links concessionaire, who has been sending the District Harding Cup team to the National Municipal Championship; Harry Graham, East Potomac, course manager; Mel Shorey, East Potomac pro; Al Price, Rock Creek pro; Win Johnson, of the District A. A. U., and Dave Herman, local representative of the United States Golf Association public links committee.

Good Support.

Burns already has the support of at least 50 of the better known municipal golfers, including Claude Rippy, District municipal champion; George Malloy, Ted Burrows, Andy Oliveri, Bob Leapley, Ralph Bennie, Serge Folk, Charlie Ficco, Harold Bowers, Herman Allen, Tom Doerer, jr., and Pat Axtell.

Although there have been several false alarms in the last few years, the municipal players are determined to organize, apply to the U. S. G. A. for a charter, and thus become eligible for National Amateur championships.

A schedule of 26 events is listed for men golfers at Beaver Dam Country Club, with the annual ringer tournament opening today, J. Hamilton Vance, tournament chairman, announced.

Now on the schedule is the Cliff Spencer Trophy tournament June 14. The club championship begins September 13. The schedule:

April 5, beginning ringer tournament; 12, modified blind bogey; flag tournament, Maryland State amateur team matches.

May 3, team matches—Beaver Dam vs. Hermitage, at Richmond; Maryland State amateur team match; 10, Golf Committee Cup (low gross), also handicap event; Maryland State amateur team match; 17-23, qualification round, miniature tournament, Maryland State amateur team match; 24, goofy tournament; 30, President's Cup (club handicap event); also driving, approaching and putting contests; 31, miniature tournament.

June 7, team match—Hermitage at Beaver Dam; 14, the Cliff Spencer Trophy (mixed scotch foursome); 21, exhibition match; 28, Marmion Trophy (club handicap event).

July 4, President's Cup (club handicap event); also driving, approaching and putting contests; 5 and 11, qualification round, miniature tournament; 12, miniature tournament; 19, Turnage Cup—team play, City vs. Country; 26, Grosner Cup (low gross); also club handicap event.

August 2, 9, 16, 23, 30, reserved (events to be announced later).

September 6, Brightwood Ex-Caddies Association tournament; 7, President's Cup (club handicap event); also driving, approaching and putting contests; 13, 20, 27 and October 4, 11, club championship. September 20, 27 and October 4, 11, Maryland State team matches. October 11, end of ringer tournament.

November 22, turkey tournament; 26, President's Cup.

Two Washington pros, Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, and Cliff Spencer, of Beaver Dam, will meet two Baltimore pros, Glenn Spencer, unattached, and Willie Schrieber, Mount Pleasant pro, today at 2:30 p. m. at the Mount Pleasant course in an exhibition match for the benefit of the flood relief. The proceeds will be turned over to the Red Cross.

W. R. Stone, veteran Indian Spring golfer, scored a hole-in-one on the 170-yard fourteenth hole of his home course. Arthur Urban, Charlie Bell and Jimmy Hunt played with him. Stone finished with an 82.

Claggett Stevens, assistant Congressional pro, returned to his duties at the club yesterday after a month's sojourn in Jacksonville Beach, Fla. Claggett picked up where his boss, Roland Mackenzie, left off, at the Ponte Vedra Country Club. His lowest score was a 72, even par. Mackenzie holds the course mark with a 66.

Members of the Mid-Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers will meet today at Congressional. A demonstration of sprinklers will feature. A golf match is scheduled for 1 p. m., dinner at 5:30 and a meeting at 6:30.

Helen Stephens Breaks U. S. 60-Yard Record

Columbia, Mo., April 4 (AP).—Helen Stephens, the "Fulton flash," broke the American A. A. U. indoor record for the women's 60-yard dash by two-tenths of a second here tonight, running the distance in 0:06[illegible].

Miss Stephens finished more than 10 yards ahead of Miss Marjorie Rhodelander, Pleasant Hill, in an added feature of the State high school indoor track and field meet.

Arrangements for the local meet did not meet A. A. U. requirements for record-breaking performances, hence the mark held by Betty Robinson, Chicago, was not officially endangered.

Champion Blue Flames Play Plaza Nine Today

Manager Tony Burruto's championship Blue Flame Valet nine will cross bats with the Plaza Wine & Liquor nine this afternoon at 1 o'clock on the East Ellipse diamond, but it will be only a practice game.

Burruto, who has high hopes of repeating this season, has a brilliant array of talent signed for the National City race, including Cliff Keyser, Karl and Freddy Nau, Frank DiNenna, Jesse Bowie, Ed Cinotti, Jake Lewis, Joe Freschi, Joe Pusateri, Harry Wiltshire, Joe Bertolini, Reggis Brown, Joe Hartman and Lefty Morgan.

Taverns Beat Pee-Wees.

Led by the combined batting talents of Citrenbaum and Miley, the Little Taverns whipped the Oates Pee-Wees, 10 to 9, yesterday on the Ellipse. McPherson pitched for the winners.

Virginia Golf Season Starts Impressively

By Charles Hamilton,

A Special Correspondent.

RICHMOND, Va., April 3.—Golf is the biggest sport in Virginia this week, getting an early start on the firm sway it holds during the summer months. Virginia's 84 courses—more than any of its neighboring States can list—will be led into the hit-and-cuss campaign by major Richmond events.

The depression ogre definitely behind, two of Richmond's major clubs have again booked invitation tournaments. Both of them once attracted the cream of Washington's talent and local men expect heavy delegations this season, since invitations are rather scarce in the South Atlantic area.

Hermitage, which discontinued its attractive annual invitation in 1930, has announced a resumption on May 22, 23, 24. The Country Club of Virginia, after a one-year lay-off, will resume its invitation on June 10, 11, 12, 13.

However, chief interest at the moment hinges upon the $3,000 open which is booked here for Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Many of the Nation's golf leaders, finishing up the masters' tournament at Augusta, are expected to drop off on their way back North.

The tournament is sponsored by Richmond merchants as a part of a giant spring festival that includes a dozen sports. It will be played over the championship James River course of the Country Club of Virginia—the same links that was the scene of the Southern amateur championship last summer.

Hermitage has booked its tournament so that it will be possible for visitors to play with loss of only one day from business. There will be an 18-hole qualifying round on Friday, May 22, with 16 making the title flight and two other sixteens to be selected. Four rounds of 18-hole match play, concluding Sunday, will wind up the battle for a collection of handsome trophies.

Dawson to Play.

Johnny Dawson is expected to play in the Country Club of Virginia affair, defending the championship he won two years ago.

Meanwhile, throughout the State the various clubs will be looking forward to the meeting of the State association here on April 18. The gathering is about two weeks later than usual, due to conflict with the Deep Run race meet and the Easter holidays. Award of the men's amateur and the open, as well as the award of the women's tourney, will be the main business.

Newport News, scene of the State open last year, has made an unexpected appearance in the picture again. Last year $500 was guaranteed by the Old Dominion Club of that city and Manager Bill Tomlinson states he is prepared to boost the ante if necessary. There was much criticism of bumpy greens at Newport News last year, but such an effort was made towards entertainment that the city has a good chance to repeat. Danville has also been mentioned, but there is considerable sentiment against a trip so far from the coast. Most of the leading clubs are concentrated in the Tidwater area.

Farmington, at Charlottesville, remains the leading choice for the amateur, although Roanoke may make a determined effort. The women's tournament will probably go to the Norfolk area, although it, too, may receive an invitation from Roanoke.

Three Teams Top.

On the basis of early and incomplete returns, William and Mary, Richmond, and the University of Virginia have the outstanding college baseball teams in the State this year. Only a few warm-up contests have been played as yet, but these three have shown plenty of power.

Washington and Lee, rated outstanding in Southern Conference circles last year, is apparently in for a poor season. Early defeats by the Indians and Randolph-Macon put a crimp into any title hopes that might have been entertained.

Richmond plays an exceptionally heavy schedule and will lose several games through scarcity of pitchers. However, the Spiders have two of the best in Harb Hash and Bucky Jacobs, and this pair will work most of the State championship games. Last year the Spiders won the State title going away. They have a good chance to repeat.

V. M. I is due for a poor year unless sophomores can plug a lot of gaps. Only four experienced players are back, and one of the shortest schedules in the State has been prepared. Even at that, Bill Raftery is worrying over getting starting pitchers for his 13-game card.

Universal Plays Globe in Finals

New York, April 4 (U.P.).—The towering McPherson (Kans.) Globe Refiners and the smooth-playing Universal Pictures quintet from Hollywood, Calif., tonight gained the Olympic basketball finals at Madison Square Garden and will battle it out tomorrow night for the right to represent the United States at the Berlin games this summer.

The McPherson Oilers, national AAU champions, entered the final by virtue of tonight's 48-30 victory over University of Washington, Pacific Coast Collegiate champions. In tonight's first semifinal, Universal Pictures trounced the Wilmerding, Pa., Y. M. C. A., 42-29. The Universals were runners-up to the Oilers in the recent AAU tourney at Denver.

D. C. Amateurs Bow In Y.M.C.A. Wrestling

Wilkes Barre, Pa., April 4.—Two amateur wrestlers from the Nation's Capital were eliminated tonight in the preliminary bouts of the National Y. M. C. A. championships in progress here. The winners will qualify for the Olympic trials semi-finals.

Scott, wrestling in the 145-pound division, was thrown by Doyle, of Salina, Kansas, after he had previously defeated Duncho, of New Castle, Pa. The District's 191-pound hope, Ackerman, was eliminated by Sealeski, of Harrison, N. J.

Shady Grove Plays.

The Shady Grove baseball team will clash with the Dixie Pigs today at 2 p. m. on the Riverdale field. All Shady Grove players are requested to report to Manager Eddie Groves at 1 p. m.

Aarons Takes Table Tennis Crowns

Wins Women's Championship Doubles and Mixed Doubles.

By the United Press.

PHILADELPHIA, April 4.—Ruth Hughes Aarons, sensational New York table tennis star, set an unprecedented record tonight by winning three titles during one meet of the United States table tennis championships.

Miss Hughes' outstanding victory was her acquisition of the women's title. Completely outclassing her finalist opponent, Anne Sigman, New York, the champion turned in the fine score of 21—13, 21—13, 21—13.

Previously she had paired with Viktor Barna, Hungary, five-times world's champion, to win the mixed doubles title. In this match, the Hungarian ace and Miss Hughes defeated Jay Purves, Chicago, and Jimmy McLure, Indianapolis, 21—15, 17—21, 21—18, 21—14.

Her first victory was the women's doubles title, which she won when paired with Miss Sigman, by defeating Miss Purves and Emily Fuller, New York, 21—16, 11—21, 21—15, 17—21, 21—19.

Sussman Victor.

In another title match played tonight, Samuel Sussman, defeated Gene Weissman, both of New York, 14—21, 21—15, 21—19, to win the boys' national singles title.

Viktor Barna, world champion, of Hungary, won the American singles title. In annexing the national crown, Barna defeated Abe Berenbaum, New York, 21—18, 21—13, 16—21, 21—16.

After his singles victory, Barna teamed with Sandor Glancz, also of Hungary, in the finals of the men's doubles. But the singles champion was unable to acquire his third title of the night.

Te Hungarian team fell before the onslaughts of Bud Blattner, St. Louis, and Jimmy McClure, Indianapolis, who won the doubles crown with a score 21—15, 21—16, 24—26, 21—17.

Sheehan's to Drill.

All members of Shehan's unlimited nine are requested to report this morning at 10:30 o'clock at 1353 H street northwest, before proceeding to their field for practice. Any new candidates are invited to attend. Sonny Burdine and Eddie Eddinger have signed with the club for this season.

Gridmen Begin Scrimmages At Virginia

Intersquad Games Are Set for Next Week, Team Has Promise.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UNIVERSITY, Va., April 4.—Virginia's spring football practice has advanced to the scrimmage stage under the watchful eye of Head Coach Gus Tebell.

Next week Tebell plans to divide the squad into two groups of 18 or 20 players each and select two teams, one the "Orange" and one the "Blue." These will play two practice games on Lambeth Field, the first on April 10 and the second on April 17, after which the squad will be disbanded until next September.

Tebell, assisted by "Butch" Slaughter, line coach, and such former varsity regulars as Spencer Berger and Peyton Hoge, have been working with a squad of between 30 and 40 players for two weeks. They started slowly, but worked up to two scrimmages at the end of this week.

Harry Martin, captain-elect of the team, heads an assortment of gridiron talent that gives promise of being developed into an eleven with more power than the one that represented Virginia on the field last fall.

Tebell has had an especially warm welcome for several men who were not out for the team last season. Among these are Eugene Munger, halfback; Jesse Stocker, guard, and Sanford Haskell, tackle, all letter-men, and Harry Tolen, reserve fullback.

While Tebell has turned the varsity baseball squad over to Frank Sippley, and is giving his full attention to developing football material, no effort has been made to strengthen the gridiron group at the expense of the spring sport teams.

Decanter Victor In Junior 'Chase

Baltimore, April 4 (AP).—In one of the most exciting finishes seen in the Worthington Valley in years, Decanter, owned and ridden by William R. Pfefferkorn, today won the fifth annual running of the unior Cross Country Steeplechase.

Decanter was a half head in front of Walter K, owned by Gittings Boyce and ridden by Congreve Jackson. A half length behind in third place was Baby Bunting, owned by G. Bernard Fenwick and Ridden by John G. Fenwick.

The two-mile, 14-jump course was run on the estate of J. W. Y. Martin. The race was the first of the steelpechasing season in the Worthington and Harford County hunting country.

Polish, owned and ridden by Hugh J. O'Donovan, was ahead at the fourteenth jump but refused the jump and lost its rider. Decanter and Walter K were just behind Polish at that point.

At least ten lengths back of the first three came Atha, owned by Benjamin L. Behr, Chicago, and ridden by Sidney Watters, jr., and Miss Superior, owned and ridden by H. Norman Baetjer, jr.

More Wide-Open Grid Games Foreseen by Schmidt, of Ohio

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 4.—The Nation's collegiate football teams—if they have the requisite talent—will play a more wide-open game next season than ever before. So says Francis A. Schimdt, coach of Ohio State University's Buckeys, co-champions of the Western Conference.

Schmidt introduced the swashbuckling style of gridiron legerdemain to the Central West two years ago, when he took over the Buckeye reins, improved on it last season after his charges had absorbed the fundamentals, and now he looks forward to a more mystifying attack in 1936.

"The lateral pass has come to stay," Schmidt said today. "The lateral is a sound offensive maneuver, but you must have the right kind of men to handle it if you want to prevent a backfire.

Need Variety.

"Every football team must have a running attack, but you can't rely on that alone. In fact, the open style of offense, with passes being tossed on unorthodox downs and from unusual places, will gradually push the running attack into the background.

"I expect to see the time, before many years, when forward and lateral passes will make up the greatest part of the offense, with the running attack just something to fall back upon.

"The wide-open, chance-taking game is the style the fans want to see. The day of having a fullback plunge into the center of the line for a yard or two at a time is rapidly passing.

"Minnesota probably will stick to the running style of game, because they raise 'em big and fast up there and have had great success with that method. But you will find that most of the other teams will throw more passes this year than ever before."

Speed, versatility and deception, Schmidt said, are the goals toward which he is working.

Down the Fairway . . .

By Dave Herman.

HERMAN.

LAWSON LITTLE'S decision to abandon the simon-pure ranks and turn "businessman" golfer is good news to young and veteran amateur stars in America and Great Britain.

It means:

(1) That there will be wide-open battles for both the British and American amateur championships.

(2) That the English, who take their golf more seriously, will have a better chance of winning the Walker Cup matches at Pine Valley next fall.

(3) That the United States Golf Association fathers face a series of violent headaches in selecting a team, now that the world's No. 1 amateur is ineligible for Walker Cup competition.

(4) That every amateur with some reputation will quicken his pace in an attempt to step in and fill the shoes of the California howitzer.

When Jim Wallace, the mill worker from Troon, learned that Little had quit the amateurs, he probably remarked:

"Well, the bloody American won't slaughter me again."

For it was at Wallace's expense in the 1934 British amateur finals at Prestwick that Little won, 14 and 13, and shot the 23 holes in 10 under fours for one of the biggest routs in history.

Dr. William Tweddell, who was Little's victim in last year's British finals, also heaved a sigh of relief, for his greatest golf wasn't good enough against the Californian's booming drives and biting iron shots.

David (Spec) Goldman, the Dallas, Tex., steel lathe worker, and Walter Emery, the tall pine from Oklahoma City, probably are sleeping better these nights. And can you blame 'em? Little's three under par performance smothered Goldman at Brookline two years ago in the American finals. Little blasted Emery's hopes at Cleveland last season by finishing five under par, and with an eagle three thrown in for good measure.

* * * *

OF COURSE, there will be more than 100 other enterprising young players who will step up to the first tee in the National Amateur at Garden City next September feeling a bit more relaxed than heretofore.

Johnny Goodman, former Open champion, Little's boon companion, won't feel the sting of Lawson's electrifying woods and irons in an amateur championship again. Johnny's golf in the 1935 semifinals against Little was hot enough to defeat anyone except the champion, it is recalled.

All of the boys are happier. Willie Turnesa, who played like a champion in the 1934 Amateur at Brookline, couldn't match Little's sizzling pace when they met. Georgie Dunlap, 1933 champion, was the last man to defeat Little in a National Amateur tournament. George Voigt, former Washington, D. C., star; Johnny Fischer, Gus Moreland, Francis Ouimet, Freddie Haas, Scotty Campbell, by way of mentioning a few of the Americans who regarded him as something of a "Frankenstein."

Precisely, the picture is the same as when Bobby Jones stepped out in the fall of 1930 after completing his famous "grand slam." When the 1931 championship came along at North Shore, Chicago, and there was no Jones, the battle was wide open. Youngsters moved into the spotlight. One Billy Howell, of Richmond, conquered Johnny Goodman and reached the semifinals, only to bow to Ouimet, who regained the crown after a patient 17-year wait.

* * * *

IN 1932 it was still wide open. A Canadian, Sandy Somerville, won it. In 1933 Dunlap came through. It was the same year the Little machine started zooming. And in 1934 and 1935 it was "Little against the field."

It used to be "Jones against the Field."

Now who will it be "Against the Field."

Good old Dixie has three youngsters who are candidates.

One is Charlie Yates, Atlanta's sandy-thatched meteor, who already has two important championships—the National Intercollegiate and the Western Amateur. O. B. Keeler, Bob Jones' Boswell, says Charlie is the next best thing to Jones.

In New Orleans there's Freddie Haas, son of a professional, who has a Johnny Revolta pair of hands—and can swing that stick. He was quarter-finalist in the 1935 National Amateur. His short game is the envy of many a pro.

Down in Richmond they're cheering Bobby Riegel, who spread-eagled the field in the Southern Amateur last year, a tremendous victory for the lean Virginian. Already flattered with an invitation from Bobby Jones to play in his Masters' tournament—a sure sign that the Atlantan recognizes golf ability—Riegel is Walker Cup timber.

With Little out of the way he has an excellent chance of making the American team. This kid gave Little a whale of a fight for nine holes in the amateur at Cleveland.

Goodman, an in-and-outer since he won the 1933 open crown, may be the man to succeed Little. Rodney Bliss, another Nebraskan, looks good.

* * * *

ON the Pacific Coast Scotty Campbell, twice Canadian champion, and Harry Givan appear to be the best.

Emery is Oklahoma's hope, and a good one. The Southwest, a hotbed for golf, also boasts such demon players as Jack Munger, Dallas (Extra Hole) Smith, Spec Goldman and its new sensation, Rufus King. All are from Texas.

Charlie (Chuck) Kocsis, of Detroit, is yet to reach his peak, as are Willie Turnesa and Joe Lynch, the former Georgetown University captain, who reached the 1935 amateur semifinals.

The District of Columbia's best bet is Roger Peacock, of Congressional, surely good enough to land a Walker Cup berth.

Naturally Georgie Dunlap, Johnny Fischer, Gus Moreland and Jack Westland, members of the 1934 Walker Cup team, are mighty good players, but they aren't in the class with Little.

Who is it going to be? Is he still in his shell or is he a golfer with a reputation, who will develop within the next year?

Dean Detton-Emil Dusek Match Heads Arena Wrestling Card

DEAN DETTON, perhaps the most popular member of the Grunt and Gouge Society ever to wander into this neck of the woods, and Emil Dusek, of the firm of Dusek, Dusek, Dusek, etc., etc., have been selected to feature next Thursday's wrestling show at the Turner Arena.

Undefeated locally in all the umpteen exhibitions he has worked since his debut last summer, Detton's most recent accomplishment is reaching the final round of the international tournament up in Philadelphia. He lost to Yvon Robert, the Montreal blacksmith, after being weakened by a fall from the ring.

On his way to the titular match, Dean, a former football star at the University of Utah, disposed of Jim Browning, former world champion; Sandor Szabo, Hungarian titleholder; Ivan Managoff, Hank Barber, Tor Johanson, Rube Wright, Alphonse Bisignano and Reb Russell.

In Emil Dusek Detton faces the most improved of all the Duseks. He said so himself. Dusek's last local one-night stand saw him destroy Sure Mike Mazurki, who used to do things in a football way for N. Y. U.

Semifinally, old Polka Mazurki, himself, will trip the light fantastic with Dr. Harry Fields, who would make Primo Carnera look like a fugitive from the Singer Midgets.

Leering Len Hall and Fearless Floyd Marshall will take care of one of the half-hour prelims, while curtain-hoisting ceremonies are to be entrusted to Jim (Sweety Pie) Coffield and Steve (Babykins) Znoski.

Southern Hero Winner Of Scottish Steeple

Bogside, Scotland, April 4 (AP).—The Scottish Grand National Steeplechase at three miles and seven furlongs was won today by James V. Rank's Southern Hero, a 9-to-2 shot in the betting.

The 11-year-old jumper came in a length in front of Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's American-owned Kellsboro Jack, the betting favorite at 11 to 8 and the winner of the Grand National Steeplechase in 1933.

Cubs Utilize Western Union to Sell Tickets For All Home Games in Chicago This Year

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 4.—Send a telegram to mother up in Mankato, Minn., and buy two tickets for the Cubs' game—all at the same spot.

Philip K. Wrigley, 41-year-old owner of the National League champions, today came up with a novel distribution plan of selling reserved seats at Wrigley Field, effective with the opening of the season. Patrons of the Cubs will be able to purchase reserved seat tickets at all Western Union telegraph offices in Chicago, 102 of them. This compares with just two places, one downtown ticket office and Wrigley Field, in previous years.

The innovation marks another touch of modernism which Wrigley has injected into mossy baseball tradition. The new plan works like this:

Each of the 102 Western Union offices in Chicago will be provided with blocks of blank tickets and a plat of the reserved seat section at Wrigley Field. The purchaser designates the section in which he desires to sit, and the Western Union representative then telephones the ball park ticket office over a direct wire and asks for the desired space. If it is available it is allotted to the purchaser.

The telegraph company representative then writes in the section, date, seat number, collects the established price, validates the ticket with his signature and turns it over to the purchaser. Thus, the ticket-holder will be able to enter the park and take his seat without being forced to stand in line between the fat lady and excitable man for probably ten or twelve minutes, and then not know where he will sit.

There will be no hurry, no shoving and no pushing in the long lines. The telegraph offices will sell tickets from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., or over a longer period, if necessary. Wrigley will engage 15 box office men and install a 20-line special telephone switchboard to handle the ticket sales. As the tickets are purchased and allotted, they will be pulled out of the central box office rack to avoid any possibility of duplicate sale, or reallotment of tickets already purchased.

There are approximately 17,000 reserved seats available for each game. They will be availabel at no increased cost. Box seats will, of course, also be sold at the ball park.

The new system, Wrigley believes, will be a staggering blow to ticket speculators. He hopes it will eliminate them.

Said the youthful Wrigley:

"I can't understand way any guy will need to pay a premium for tickets in the future when they will be on sale at 102 places, insteao of just two places. You can buy them for any game you wish, even as late as game time or after it has started, and know exactly where you are going to sit."

Virginia Bows To Dartmouth Nine, 7-3

Indians Capture Fourth Straight Win, Bat Todd Off Hill.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 4.—Dartmouth defeated Virginia here today, 7 to 3, to register its fourth successive victory on its Southern trip.

Olson, who started on the mound for the visitors, held the Cavaliers to six hits and one run in eight innings, but his successor, Bruin, was nicked for two runs in the ninth frame. Bouldin led with the stick, collecting three hits, including a double.

Coach Sipley, of Virginia, sent another sophomore to the mound in the person of Todd, regular third baseman, and the lad made an excellent showing for seven innings, hoding the visitors to four hits. He cracked in the next frame, however, and Mustard finished the game.

Dartmouth's first run was a gift, Frigard scoring from third when Carter threw to second to catch Allen, who had walked. In the next frame Ratajczak hit for the circuit, and in the sixth Dartmouth added another run when Frigard opened with a hit, pilfered second, was advanced to third on Ray's sacrifice and counted on Pounder's single.

Florida-Cuba Yacht Missing After Week

Havana, Cuba, April 4 (AP).—The 34-foot Sea Call, owned and skippered by W. E. Everitt, of St. Petersburg, and which started the annual St. Petersburg-Havana yacht race a week ago today, still was unreported this morning.

The United States Coast Guard cutter Pandora, which set out yesterday in quest of both the Sea Call and the Cuban schooner Albatross, owned by Dr. M. H. Sordo, of Havana, was expected this morning, but did not arrive.

The Albatross arrived late last night under full sail. Cuban yachting officials said the failure of the Pandora to return today indicated she still was searcing for the American yawl.

371 Girls, Boys Vie for Honors In Kite Contest

Weather Ideal for Flying; Winners Get Ribbons, Champions Cups.

Sailing and bobbing against the cool April skies, the kites of 371 Washington boys and girls took swift flight yesterday in the Playground Department's annual tournament, tacking and waving to glory or defeat as skill, the winds and chance would have it.

Five contests were held simultaneously on as many fields, from 10 a. m. until 2 p. m. Spots where the tournament was conducted were Anacostia Park, Section D; the Monument Grounds, Garret Park, Md.; Banneker Recreation Center, and Anacostia Park, Section C.

Contestants came from the District, nearby Maryland and Arlington and Fairfax counties, of Virginia. There were, as is the usual custom, three classes, juniors, seniors, and fathers-and-sons. The kites themselves were divided into three classes, tailed kites, parakites and cell kites.

Blue, red and white ribbons were awarded in each group of competition. These groups were workmanship, design, appearance and performance. At each of the five contests a champion was selected, and to each champion the District Model Aircraft League awarded a small silver loving cup.

Day Ideal for Kites.

The day was ideal and flying conditions couldn't have been better if it had been gusty March, traditional month of the kites. In color and design the paper sky adventures were varied and kaleidescopic. There were blues and yellows and pinks and greens and reds. There was an utter hodge-podge of color and design.

From one kite the face of a painted dragon leered, and from another the benign countenance of a crayoned house dog.

Typical of the entrants in the tournament were Barbara Jane Garber, 9-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Garber, and Simon Schwartz, 10, of 1921 Eighteenth street northwest.

Barbara, whose father is head of the Aeronautics Division of the Smithsonian Institution, flew a specially painted kite and won a first place and a third place ribbon. The figure on her kite was that of a dark-haired girl, with slanting Oriental eyes, clad in a middie blouse and a scarlet skirt.

Schwartz won no prize. His kite soared skyward, then twisted and fell giddily in the wind.

"It is all right," Barbara told him. "There will be another tournament next year, and you can fly another kite. Never give up."

Will Try Again.

Simon shook his head, then resolved to follow her advice.

Health Bureau Clinic Program Pushed Ahead

Dr. Ruhland Hopes to Place Treatment Centers in All Sections.

Although there is little hope that the necessary funds will be granted, the Health Department is going forward with a clinic development program which would place at least one such diagnostic and treatment center in each section of Washington.

Asked yesterday to verify reports that the project was being whipped into shape, Health Officer George C. Ruhland said that such a program is under study and that an actual start only awaits allocation of the required appropriations.

At the present time the Health Department conducts only two clinics, tuberculosis and venereal. The former is located at 301 C street northwest, the other at 512 I street northwest. Both have been widely criticized, not only for their lack of adequate personnel and facilities, but because of their poor locations.

Under plans being drawn by Dr. Ruhland and Dr. A Barklie, director of the department's tuberculosis bureau, a number of polyclinics would be established in strategic locations in different sections of the Capital. That is, they would be placed where the need was greatest.

Four Added to Staff.

The polyclinic, an expedient which has been adopted in New York, Chicago and other large cities that are more progressive than Washington in public health matters, combines under one roof medical facilities to handle a variety of cases. Dr. Ruhland would like to see them set up here to care for tuberculosis and venereal patients, prospective mothers requiring pre-natal care and children in need of vaccination, diptheria inoculation, etc.

Four part-time physicians, all especially trained in chest work, have been added to the Health Department staff with the polyclinic idea in mind, Dr. Ruhland said. In the meantime, they will serve under Dr. Coulter, who has charge of the Capital's lone chest clinic open to the general public at no cost.

Two more physicians and two nurses are studying tuberculosis at the Phipps Institute, in Philadelphia, under scholarships furnished by the District Tuberculosis Association. They would be available upon completion of their courses, for assignment to the polyclinics.

Savings Stressed.

The four men added to the Health Department staff are Drs. Charles Cake, Dr. LeRoy Dunn, Hill Carter and Marvin McLean, said Dr. Coulter. It may now be possible, he continued, to increase the number of sessions at the C street Chest examination station. White and Negro adults, at the present time, are examined on alternate days. White children are received on Monday, Negro on Friday.

Establishment of the polyclinics, Dr. Ruhland emphasized, would result in great savings to the municipal government by reducing hospitalization expense. In the case of tuberculosis, for example, many indigent patients have to be sent to hospitals who might safely remain at home if provisions were made to treat them in clinics.

The C street clinic diagnoses cases, but does not treat them. Under the scheme being contemplated by Dr. Ruhland, sufferers from the white plague would receive pneumo-thorax treatments and other therapy that can be performed upon ambulatory patients simply by making regular visits to the health stations in their respective neigborhoods.

Old Soldier, Bumped By Friend, Succumbs

Comparative youth succumbed to old age at Soldiers' Home yesterday.

William Maurer, 82 collided with Alexander Mahoney, 91, while both were walking around in the dark in the early hours of March 14.

Maurer fractured his hip when he fell. He subsequently contracted pneumonia and died yesterday in the home's hospital.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of accidental death.

Teaching Facts Will Fight Reds, Sisson States

Schools Free of Advocates of Communism, He Tells Union.

Speaking at a dinner of the Teachers' Union held at the Hotel Carlton last night, Representative Fred J. Sisson, sponsor of the bill to repeal the "red rider," advocated teaching facts without bias as the best protection against Communism or any other "subversive doctrine."

Biting off epithets incisively, Representative Sisson declared that "those zealots, fanatics, witch-hangers, beggars," couldn't produce a single instance of a District teacher advocating Communism.

He cited the small percentage of Communists in the United States as evidence of their unimportance as a political factor.

Representative Byron B. Harlan, of Ohio, said he was impressed with the silliness of the "red rider" which would attempt to prevent children from learning what happened in that great block of territory on their geography maps. Organized labor he considered a strong bulwark against Communism.

Continuing along the same theme, Representative William P. Connery, of Massachusetts, remarked that if the idea embodied in the "red rider" were carried to its absurd conclusion, "nothing but the three R's would be taught in the schools."

The presence in Congress of Thomas Blanton and Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, the "hit-and-run witness," was termed a "travesty of intelligence and fair play" by Dr. Richard Hogue, director of the Independent Legislative Bureau. "No man stands lower in the opinion of his fellow Congressmen and of the general public than Thomas Blanton," said Dr. Hogue.

John Larkin, president of the Central Labor Union, stated that his group was solidly behind the teachers' local union in its efforts to obtain better pay and better living conditions.

The secretary of the Central Labor Union, Frank Colman, called the Washington labor movement the most conservative in the country. Mentioning Washington's freedom from serious strikes, he termed this city the "ideal labor community."

Michael Flynn, of the newswriters' union, told the teachers that they must have public opinion with them. He praised their walkout from a labor convention which was even allegedly dominated by Communists.

Present at the dinner were Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Henry Gilligan and Henry I. Quinn, of the Board of Education; Dr. Frank Ballou, superintendent of schools, and Dr. S. E. Kramer, assistant superintendent. Mary Dent, president of the teachers' union, presided.

Commissioners Move to Repair Training School

Name Committee to Report Tuesday on Cost of Remodeling Home.

Immediate action by the Commissioners on the proposed extensive remodeling of the National Training School for Girls, at Little Falls and Conduit roads, was forecast yesterday when Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, named a special committee to prepare estimates of costs for action by the Commissioners on Tuesday.

Capt. J. S. Bishop, assistant engineer commissioner, and M. A. Coe, chief of the architectural division of the municipal arcihtect's office, were charged with preparing the estimates.

Needs of the school were discussed by Capt. Bishop and Coe with Elwood Street, director of public welfare, during the morning, and first-hand inspection is to be made tomorrow.

Remodeling of the school was asked by Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, newly appointed superintendent, after public attention had been ocused on its present condition by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the House District Committee, and Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, member of the Senate District Committee and the Senate District appropriations subcommittee.

Dr. Weaver submitted a long list of needs. Among improvements required, she said, were a new plumbing system throughout the institution; a new heating plant; reconstruction of the old farm residence; construction of two brick bungalows to be used as dormitories for colored women; remodeling of the so-called colonial cottage or use as a dormitory for colored girls; construction of a new central kitchen and dining room for white girls; reconstruction of the barn as a dining room and classroom for colored girls.

In general the eastern part of the institution would be used for white inmates and the western half for colored. New facilities for teaching of domestic science and other classes, home for the superintendent and attendants and other changes are contemplated.

National Fight On Traffic Law 'Fixing' Is Plan

16 States Represented at Meeting of Auto Committee Here.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Political influence, discrimination and favoritism are defying administration of the Nation's traffic laws.

Practices of "fixing" traffic law violations have assumed serious proportions in jurisdictions throughout the country.

Ticket "fixing" has weakened law enforcement and demoralized traffic courts and police.

Traffic charge quashing by influential motorists has threatened highway safety and contributed to the Nation's accident toll.

These were charges hurled at the country's traffic system yesterday by the traffic safety advisory committee, American Automobile Association, meeting in the Washington Hotel.

Bitterly attacking methods of alleged law evasion, members of the committee, representing 16 States, condemned accused drivers who attempt to escape punishment for their offenses by using so-called "drag" or "pull" with enforcement authorities.

Says Practices Exist.

"It is foolish to blind ourselves by flimsy assertions that no such "fixing" conditions exist—either in Washngton or any other major city in the country," said one committee member. "The fact remains that these practices do exist and will continue to exist until steps are taken to stop them."

And to this end, the committee declared a nation-wide "war" against traffic law juggling and appealed to the motoring public for support. A resolution read:

"We condemn 'fixing' in all its forms and urge nation-wide adoption of steps to combat it in the interest of saving lives and the proper administration and enforcement of motor vehicle laws designed to that end."

Drunk Driving Attacked.

Following stormy debate, the committee turned its attention to the question of drunken driving, describing the offense as one of the greatest contributing factors to the mounting toll of highway accidents, injuries and deaths.

Penalties for driving under the influence of liquor, the committee pointed out, are far below standard in many section of the country. Citing mandatory suspension or revocation of driving permits for conviction of this offense in the District, a spokesman for the committee declared:

"The problem of drunken driving can be solved only by stern and unrelenting law enforcement without fear or favor."

The committee, in another resolution, urged "tightening up" of laws governing this offense and warned enforcement agencies they must place the full weight of their authority behind these laws in order to rid the highways of an insidious evil.

Standard laws and penalties, as established by the Uniform Motor Vehicle Code, were suggested for adoption by enforcement authorities throughout the country.

Expansion Planned.

Plans for widespread expansion of motor club activities were also announced by the committee.

Centering in Washington, increased activities will spread to the various States with highway safety mobilizations, extension of safety education work, enlargement of the school safety patrol movement, special drivers' tests and establishment of drivers' schools.

The committee includes many of the country's outstanding traffic experts and safety engineers.

During yesterday's sessions, George W. Barton, chairman of the committee and pioneer in efforts to establish adequate testing devices for prospective drivers, exhibited new machines designed to test reactions, vision and driving agility.

3 Talks Scheduled.

The Rev. Romanus, S. M., of the Marist Seminary, Brookland, will conduct a Day of Recollection today at Nazareth Social Service Center, 200 I street northwest. The first conference will be at 10:30 a. m.; the second at 2:30 p. m., and the Holy Hour at 4:30 p. m.

Knowing the Woman Is Secret Of Judging Beauty, Says Artist

Hans Schlereth, Washington Painter, Disagrees, in Part, With Countess; Would Place Jeanette MacDonald at Top of His List.

Here's that popular question again—is Mary X or Hildegrade Y a beautiful woman? What makes a woman beautiful, anyway?

Recently Countess Mira Skarbek de Korzybska, internationally known portrait painter, listed as the most beautiful women in America Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, Minister to Denmark, and the actresses, Helen Hayes and Katharine Cornell.

Agree?

Well, many people don't, but the countesses' reasons are that while these women do not have skin-deep beauty which is the usual conception of beauty, "theirs is intellectual beauty which does not fade."

Hans Schlereth, well-known Washington portrait painter, who recently completed a picture of Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, agreed that these women are beautiful "to an artist rather than to the general public, who prefer simply pretty faces," but he would include a movie star or two in the country's list of beauties.

"To find out if a woman is really beautiful, you have to know her. I don't know Greta Garbo, but I imagine I would find her more beautiful off the screen than on, where much of the real woman is disguised by make-up.

But among the silver screen artists, this portrait painter's first choice is Jeanette MacDonald, whose face, he says, has both conventional beauty and character, the criterion by which an artist judges beauty.

Myrna Loy also got a vote from Schlereth, but not as enthusiastic a one he gave the singing star. She is lovely, but no classic Helen of Troy, he said.

Two Washington women are more beautiful to Miss Catherine Critcher, a painter and member of the Art Club, who has an art school in the city, than any of the five in the Countess' list. They are the blonde and vivid wife of the Czechoslovakian minister, Mme. Ferdinand Veverka, and stately brunette Mrs. Harrison Fairfax, one of the city's social leaders.

"Mme. Veverka's daughter, Nella, is also beautiful but not in a class with her mother," Miss Critcher said, "and Mrs. Fairfax is a well-known beauty."

Garbo also was included on Miss Critcher's list because "her rather ugliness has a certain beauty which I consider more important than that of Helen Hayes or any of the others mentioned.

"The Countess' list is quite startling, I should say, for, while those women are good looking, I should never class them as beautiful."

At the Corcoran Gallery of Art, one of the officials there said beauty is judged by an artist in terms of facial contour and evidences of character rather than by the standards that makes the group on the corner turn and stare after a smartly dressed, well groomed and pretty-faced woman as she passes.

Burke's Last Roll Call

Former Inspector Frank S. W. Burke, left, receives a radio from members of the Detective Bureau, from which he retired as chief on February 1. He is shaking hands with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, as his successor, Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, looks on.

Burke Attends Last Roll Call Of Detectives

Former Inspector Retired Because of Ill Health; Praised by Brown.

Former Inspector Frank S. W. Burke, who resigned as chief of detectives February 1 because of ill health, attended his last roll call at police headquarters last night.

Tears were seen running down the cheeks of five hard-boiled sleuths as all of the men of Burke's former staff gathered to bid him goodbye and present him with a large radio.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, in presenting the gift in behalf of the men, congratulated Burke for having built up "one of the most efficient detective bureaus in the country."

Detective Sgt. A. D. Secrest was picked at random from the force to tell Burke how those who had worked under him elt about his departure.

"Burke was a fighter," he said. "We men like fighters."

Traffic

the unemployed might be raised to $3,000,000 or more.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen has proposed a 1-cent increase in the local gasoline tax as a possible solution.

The Senate sub-committee probably will remain in session all this week, as at least two days more will be needed to hear all civic organizations, after which the traffic problem will be tackled and the sub-committee will decide whether to grant an audience to Representative Thomas L. Blanton.

Thomas brought out at yesterday's hearings that more than half of the children attending Washington's public schools are sons and daughters of Government employes, mots of whom retain their residence in the States.

"That's a strong argument for a larger Federal contribution to the District bill," he said. "If these Government employes lived at their homes in the States, their communities would be taxed for additional school facilities.

"It is not fair that the people of the District should have to bear the full expense of furnishing them with school facilities here when they retain their State residences."

Yesterday's hearing was concerned solely with schools. Two large delegations were received, after which other waiting witnesses were dismissed until 2 p. m. tomorrow.

Senator Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, headed a delegation from the Takoma Park and Manor Park areas, appealing for a $500,000 appropriation to begin construction of a senior high school for the northern area of the city. A site already has been purchased, it was pointed out, at Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest.

Accompanying Frazier were representatives of the Takoma Park, Manor Park, Chillum Heights and Sixteenth Street Heights citizens associations and the American Legion post for the last-named area.

Another delegation made a plea for $73,000 to build a stadium at Woodrow Wilson High School and to provide funds for a new wing to Alice Deal Junior High School.

The delegation included Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler, Mrs. C. D. Wright, Mrs. Wilbur LaRoe, jr., Harold Smith, Paul Williams and George Deiffenbach.

Among the witnesses who were on hand, but will not be heard until tomorrow are:

Rufus Lusk, of the Washington Taxpayers Protective Association, who will argue against any increase in the $1,506,000 appropriation for unemployment relief and for restoration of the $3,000,000 cut from the lump-sum payment.

Mrs. Carroll Johnson, first vice president of the City-wide Playground Council, who will ask $12,345 to keep open the year round some of the 66 playgrounds which are open only part time. She said that only 34 of 100 playgrounds are open full time.

Mrs. Florence Mahoney and Mrs. Lillian Selby, who will ask that the Community Center appropriation be raised from $50,000 to $75,000 and that a community center be established in the Trinidad area.

Tax Study Unit For D. C. Asked By Civic Group

Permanent Commission Is Urged to Decide Equitable Proportions.

A resolution favoring a permanent body of five members, serving without renumeration, and acting as an independent commission on fiscal relations, whose function it would be to decide on an equitable proportion between local taxation and Congressional appropriation for the District budget, was unanimously adopted by the Federation of Citizens' Associations at their meeting last night in the District Building.

The personnel would be chosen by the Speaker of the House, the President of the Senate, one each from their respective bodies; two by the President from taxpayers of the District; the fifth member, to be selected by the other four and chosen from outside the Federal District and payroll.

The federation also went on record as favoring the restoration of the original District appropriation recommended by the Commissioners in the amount of $8,357,000.

Other resolutions adopted voiced the federation's opposition to any new tax measures, endorsed the Commissioners recent decision to keep the streets and alleys clean and demanded the immediate restoration of tah old Second Police Precinct in its former building which now houses the Women's Bureau.

The following members were selected to meet the Senate Appropriation Committee tomorrow at 2 p. m.: Thomas E. Lodge, president of the federation; Fred S. Walker, George E. Sullivan, Arthur Adelman, Dr. Charles B. Campbell, Thomas J. Llewellyn, John A. Reemon, L. A. Carruthers, Harry N. Stull and A. H. Gregory.

His 'Pal'

Master Posts $200 Bond, Retrieves Dog.

The current Takoma Park, Md., battle over Pal, the 9-year-old German shepherd dog whose divided loyalties have caused his "master" to have his "mistress" arrested, entered a new phase yesterday.

Whalen P. Toler got tired of waiting for the wheels of justice to turn and swore out a writ of replevin, posted $200 bond and collected Pal.

The dog had been staying recently with Miss Dorothy Hartle, his owner when he was a puppy and for whom he has had a lingering affection ever since.

She gave Pal to him, Toler claims, 8½ years ago when she thought the dog was going to die and Toler offered to cure him.

Recently Pal has been spending too much of his time with his former mistress. So Toler, on March 25, swore out a warrant for Miss Hartle's arrest.

The trial, set for Friday, was postponed. Toler got lonesome for his dog and impatient with justice. Thus, his move yesterday.

Hunger Stories Flood District Relief Agencies

No Means of Relieving Distress; 196 Appeals Reach Offices.

Stories of hungry children, sick wives, cold homes and no homes at all were poured into the ears of public and private relief and welfare workers yesterday as men and women sought from some source funds with which to purchase the bare necessities of life for their dependents.

Cut off from public relief rolls because of lack of funds with which to extend public relief to employable persons, hundreds of heads of families pleaded for at least enough to feed their families for another day or two in the hope that tomorrow they might have a job.

Some of the 12 members of the family of one WPA worker went hungry yesterday and others will go hungry today because the maximum of $45 a month, "security wage," was not enough to buy food and clothes and rent.

"I just can't stretch my money far enough to feed all my folks," he explained when he sought help from a Community Chest agency. Appeals from 196 family heads had been received by such agencies between April 1 and yesterday, it was announced.

Where an unemployed truck driver, who lost his job because of illness, is going to get money to make ends meet he didn't know. His wife makes $5 a week. His rent is $6 a week. They have several children.

Another man cut off from relief, who appealed to the agency, is paid $10 a week. He has a wife and six children, ranging from 1 to 15 years of age. Supplemental relief granted him was cut off. Now there is no food in the house. Six children are hungry.

Many Requests.

"There is nothing the Chest agencies can do," it was said. "To take on even one more family, they point out, would mean removal from the rolls of an agency another family, equally worthy and in equally desperate straits."

Elwood Street, director of public welfare, said applicants for at least temporary help continued to flood relief offices.

"They are persons in the most distressing imaginable circumstances, but there is nothing the Board of Public Welfare can do because of lack of funds," Street said.

Checks were sent out on April 1 to 3,895 cases on relief rolls, he stated. These were unemployables and families of children eligible for dependent aid. The total of the checks was $59,218.17. Street estimated the number of individuals was 13,632. That total was reached on the basis of an average of 3½ persons per case.

Relief officials are studying the situation and seeking to find some plan which will offer some hope of amelioration of conditions, Street said. His statement was in the nature of a reply to the comment by Representative James P. Buchanan (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. Mr. Buchanan said Budget Bureau approval of the request for $258,000 additional for relief for the current year wouldn't mean very much unless relief officials submitted a definite plan to bring relief down to normal.

Employment Necessary.

"There is only one way to cut down the need for relief," Street said. "That way is to find employment for those persons who are able to work. There is private employment and public employment. The latter is represented by the WPA which is not adequate. There seems little prospect that private employment will increase sufficiently to care for those in need and willing and anxious to work.

"Bring relief down to normal? What is normal? Normality today certainly bears no relation to the normality of pre-depression days. At that time there was no public relief as we know it now. There were approximately 1,000 cases carried by private agencies. These agencies still are carrying their capacity loads.

"The depression has been like a great river swollen by a flood which has swept through the economic life of our city and left a new high water mark such as we have not known in the past.

"There can be no disputing that there are thousands of deserving men and women, many with helpless dependents, who are desperately seeking and anxious to find means of livelihood free from the public relief rolls. The need of these persons is incontestable. They are hungry. Their children are hungry. Many need medicine and medical and nursing care. What are they to do? What can the Board of Welfare do in the face of the Budget Bureau action and the action of the House of Representatives?"

Charge of Hitting Boy Is Denied by Policeman

Manning Clagett, Capitol policeman, charged with assaulting the 15-year-old son of Private W. C. Grooms of the First Precinct, pleaded not guilty when arraigned before Judge Isaac R. Hitt in Police Court yesterday. The case was continued until Tuesday.

A warrant sworn out by Private Grooms, charged Clagett struck his son, Paul, while he and four youths were playing Sunday on the west steps of the Capitol.

Paul appeared in the United States Attorney's office with a black eye the day after the alleged attack.

Clagett was released under $100 bond pending his appearance in court.

Session Closes; 2 Montgomery Measures Lost

Legislature Passes 15 Bills in County Program; Bond Bill Approved.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 4.—All except two bills of the Montgomery County legislative program were rushed to passage before adjournment sine die of the General Assembly early yesterday.

Fifteen measures, passed with the aid of frequent suspensions of the rules in the House of Delegates and the Senate, will be sent to Gov. Harry W. Nice for his signature. Only two bills were lost in the tumultuous closing hours of the Legislature.

The principal piece of legislation enacted was the $180,000 school improvement bond issue bill. It originally provided for the sale of securities to finance the construction of a junior high school at Kensington and street and ground improvements at the Chevy Chase elementary school. An amendment was attached in the House to apportion $2,000 of the proceeds for ground improvements at Sherwood High School in Sandy Spring.

Limits Expenditures.

Another local bill was revised in the House when the county delegation changed the permanent registration system measure to allow the two members of the proposed board of registry only actual expenditures for automobile travel about the county. The revision, however, would not allow the spending of more than $400.

State Senator Steadman Prescott agreed to the amendments to both the bond issue and permanent registration system bills, and both were enacted in the upper house when sent back for concurrence.

Uncollected levies made for suburban district street improvements under the front foot benefit assessment plan would be extended over a 10-year period and collected in equal annual installments beginning July 1 through the provisions of another county bill that completed its legislative routine.

1935 Law Repealed.

Other Montgomery County bills passed and awaiting the signature of the Governor make the following provisions:

Repeal of the law passed at the 1935 session, enabling the county commissioners to impose a 2-cent tax on each $100 of assessed property valuation in the Bethesda area for maintenance of the Newcomb Club, Bethesda Public Library, which has ceased to function.

Setting up a fire tax of 6 cents on each $100 of assessed property valuation in that section of the ninth precinct of Wheaton election district lying outside of Takoma Park for the support of the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department, proceeds of which would amount to approximately $500.

Elimination of personal property levies on automobiles from provisions of the semi-annual tax payment law to become effective in 1937.

Provision for a referendum May 4 on the legalization of games of skill and chance at benefit carnivals and similar functions.

Police Court Created.

Creation of a police court for the town of Takoma Park through the appointment of a police justice, who would receive an annual salary of $1,200, half to be appropriated by the county and half by the town.

Lost in Senate committees as the General Assembly adjourned were the bills making the use of voting machines in the Bethesda and Wheaton election districts mandatory and enabling the election supervisors to effect economies in the conduct of polling following installation of such machines.

The voting machine bill, introduced by Senator Prescott, died in the elections committee of the Senate after it had been sent to that body for concurrence in amendments offered Thursday in the House by Joseph A. Cantrel, Fusion Party member of the Montgomery delegation.

Under the amendments, the board of election supervisors would have been permitted to consolidate any precincts it might deem advisable for economy purposes after the machines are installed and would have curtailed the employment of election clerks in those districts and limited poll employes to four judges in each precinct.

Use Is Discretionary.

The amendments had practically the same intent as a bill introduced by Cantrel and Walter M. Magruder, second Fusion party member of the county delegation. It passed the House, but died in a select committee of the Senate. It was the lone bill presented by Cantrel and Magruder during the session.

Death of the voting machine bill does not necessarily mean the equipment will not be employed in the two heavily populated districts, but leaves its use discretionary with the elections board. An act of the 1935 Legislature provided that the machines may be purchased and installed in any or all of the Bethesda and Wheaton precincts if ordered by the supervisors.

Bishop J. McKim Dies in Honolulu

New York, April 4 (AP).—Word was received here today of the death in Honolulu of the Right Rev. John McKim, 84, until last November Episcopal Bishop of North Tokyo, Japan. He had been a missionary in Japan for 57 years.

Born in Pittsfield, Mass., July 17, 1852, Bishop McKim was educated there, at Nashotah House, in Wisconsin, and later received degrees from Trinity College and Oxford University, in England.

He departed for Japan immediately after his ordination in 1879. In 1893 he was elected bishop of Tokyo with jurisdiction extending from Osaka to Aomori. This huge diocese was subsequently divided four times, and there are now six bishops in the area he formerly presided over.

Under his organization, hospitals, churches and schools were constructed throughout Japan after the earthquake of 1923, and he presided at the consecration of the first two Japanese bishops of his church.

Vera Stretz Plans Rest Following Trial Ordeal

New York, April 4 (AP).—Vera Stretz said tonight she will leave New York soon to visit in the country "to try to forget" the slaying of her lover, Dr. Fritz Gebhardt, for which she was acquitted by a "blue-ribbon" jury last night.

From the skyscraper office of her attorney, Samuel Leibowitz, she gazed today at the Statue of Liberty. "Looks pretty good," she said. She didn't know what to do with herself, she said; there had been five months in prison, with spaghetti and beans alternately for supper. Now she was free to go home to her father's apartment, "and pretty soon out in the country with green grass. It's all so unreal; I want to forget."

Mrs. Roosevelt Views Exhibit Of Art Objects From Own Home

President's Private Collection of Marine Prints, Ship Models at Corcoran Gallery 'Displayed to Advantage,' She Tells Director There.

A few minutes after she landed by plane from Norfolk, Va., where she christened the aircraft carrier Yorktown yesterday, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt attended the public viewing of art objects with which she has been surrounded in her own home for years.

She explained she wanted to see how the President's private collection of marine prints, ship models and naval paintings looked on walls less familiar than her own. The collection is on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

"It looks very well and the things are displayed to great advantage," she told the director, C. Powell Minnigerode, who accompanied her on her 10-minute visit to the gallery.

She went through the four rooms quickly for a general impression of the pictures that have been housed in the private living quarters of the family on the second floor of the White House since the Roosevelts moved in.

The story behind the exhibit is interesting. The Corcoran director was at the White House recently and the President showed him his collection, which he had been gathering for many years and which has been augmented by gifts from persons who knew he was interested in prints, paintings of models of anything to do with the country's naval history in any art medium.

The director remarked he would like to display the collection. The President assented and the cataloguing of the pieces, never done before, was begun. As each object was taken from a mantlepiece, chest or from the walls of the rooms on the second floor of the White House, a tiny numbered sticker was placed in the enpty space.

As the President had placed the exhibit in the family's private living quarters himself, the gallery workers marked every space so each object could be returned to its original spot.

All but a half dozen or so of the pieces in the collection were taken to the gallery and the President supervised the selection of those for public view.

Guards are placed around each room of the display and if any enthusiastic person leans too hard on the glass case around a ship model, he is immediately touched on the shoulder and the error of his ways pointed out.

More than 4,000 invitations to the private view were sent out.

Two ship models attracted special attention. One was that of the frigate Constitution which was made for Surgeon Baily Washington shortly after the close of the War of 1912. It was given to the Davidge family and was in the attic of their Washington home at Seventeenth and H tsreets, when the President bought it in 1914. The other model was that of the ultra-modern, speedy Normandie.

The history of some of the pieces was not known until this exhibit, when Capt. Dudley Knox, U. S. Navy, retired, whose hobby is naval history, co-operated with the gallery and traced the stories in back of the paintings.

Library of Booth Arrives at School

The school recently acquired the entire library of the late Benjamin L. Gaskins, former member of the Board of Education, and one of the founders of the Terrell Law School, who has been succeeded as a member of the faculty by Judge William C. Hueston, former Assistant Solicitor of the Postoffice Department.

The library committee of the school has named Emory B. Smith, instructor in legal bibliography and contracts, as its head. He will direct a campaign for increased library facilities.

Town Adjacent To Washington Changes Name

Greater Capitol Heights to Be Known Hereafter as 'Hillside.'

The name of Greater Capitol Heights, an incorporated town located along the southeastern boundary of the District of Columbia, has been changed to "Hillside," it was announced yesterday.

Chief P. G. Chandler of the local volunteer fire department, sponsors of the move to change the name, said the action was taken because of the similarity to Capitol Heights, located nearby.

Chief Chandler said:

"The need of this change was imperative, owing to the constant confusion experienced by both commercial firms and individuals due to the similarity in the name to that of Capitol Heights, a nearby incorporated town.

"The Community of Hillside will embrace the area starting at the District Line and will be bounded on the south by the Marlboro Pike and adjacent property, on the north by the corporate limits of Capitol Heights, and on the east by District Heights.

"The name 'Hillside' was selected by the department due to the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company's exchange by that name serving the community."

Approximately 40 members of Maryland's 4H Club "All Stars" registered yesterday at the University of Maryland for the organization's annual spring convention.

The meetings were held informally in the Agricultural Building. Dr. Thomas B. Symons, head of the university's extension service, and Miss Venia M. Kellar, State home demonstration agent, gave short talks.

Last night a dinner was held at the Alpha Gamma Rho Fraternity house. This was followed by a dance. Religious services will be held this morning. H. C. Byrd, president of the university, will speak.

A. J. Brundage, State club leader of Connecticut, assisted in the metings, at which Ridgely Howes, of Gaithersburg, chief of the "All Stars," presided.

The Brentwood Town Council will be informed at its meeting tomorrow night that all allotments due from the Maryland gas tax fund have been exhausted.

According to E. W. Baker, town clerk, a letter from the State roads commission stated there are no funds in the Prince Georges County account with which to pay the apportionment to Brentwood. The letter read in part: "The commission desires to state that Prince Georges County has an overdraft and they have no funds in their account with which to pay your allocation."

Baker said the officials felt that the letter indicates that the county as a whole received more than its share of the fund in 1935, but they pointed out that while this may be true, Brentwood did not receive its share for that year.

Funds thus received from the commission are used by the towns for street maintenance. Failure to receive the money will cause a serious problem for Brentwood, it was said. Road funds have been exhausted.

Considerable economizing was necessary to make last year's funds for this purpose last through the winter. Funds derived from the town tax cannot be used for road improvement purposes.

Baker pointed out that the town has been spending on an average $2,500 a year for repairing unimproved streets in the community. Temporary repair work was declared to be unsatisfactory.

Officials of the town applied last summer for assistance from the Works Progress Administration to carry out a permanent improvement program in this regard, but have been unable to obtain such aid.

The Mount Rainier-Brentwood Parent-Teachers Association will meet in Brentwood School at 8 p. m. Monday, instead of April 13, as originally planned. The executive committee will meet at 7:15 p. m.

Prince Georges Grand Jury Gets Loring Case Tomorrow

State's Attorney Not Expected to Ask for Indictment; 43 Other Charges Will Be Placed Before Body.

Behind closed doors, 24 grand jurors of Prince Georges County will convene tomorrow at Upper Marlboro to hear State's Attorney Alan Bowie recount the brutal slaying of Corinna Loring at Mount Rainier last November.

Bowie will not seek an indictment unless Lieut. Joseph Itzel, of the Baltimore Police Department, chief investigator, is there with unexpected evidence.

Instead, he will "officially inform the grand jury that the murder has taken place."

Just how far he will go toward revealing the store of yet unpublicized evidence which has been gathered by Itzel and his assistants, is problematical.

He probably will tell them, though, about gross discrepancies in the testimony of certain persons under suspicion.

No indictment in the fatal garroting of the 27-year-old public stenographer last November 4 will be sought because, as the chief invehtigator says, he does not have a complete case against the party he believes guilty.

Until recalled to Baltimore on the Gaither murder case, Itzel had been spending much time in and around Washington, especially at the Bureau of Standards. There Government experts have been trying in vain to find similarity between the fatal noose and some cord found in the possession of suspected persons.

The body of Miss Loring was found in a clump of bushes on Saddleback Ridge, Mount Rainier, five days after she was reported missing and three days after she was to have married Richard Tear, 29, of 201 Channing street northeast.

The Prince Georges County grand jury will also get 43 other cases. One will be the charge of criminal negligence against Mrs. Bessie Bruckschen, of Capitol Heights.

Dorothy, the infant daughter of Mrs. Bruckschen, was burned to death when their home was destroyed by flames last Christmas Day.

The grand jury will also be asked to inquire into an attempted attack on a woman attendant at the Cheltenham House of Reformation. Besides these, the following cases are listed:

Larceny, 6; criminal assault, 1; false pretense, 3; non-support, 7; storebreaking, 2; housebreaking, 4; forgery, 3; assault with intent to kill, 3; malicious destruction of property, 1, and dumping, 2.

Social Leaders' Help Held Bar To 'Stakes' Loss

'Obligation' of Mrs. Harriman, Others Argued at Postal Hearing Here.

By the Associated Press.

Oliver C. Harriman, New York financier, alternately smoked two seasoned pipes as he listened to lawyers argue yesterday over the "obligation" of his mother and other society leaders for the payment of "$60,000 in cash prizes" offered in the "selection sweepstakes" of the National Conference on Legalizing Lotteries, Inc.

The hearing was marked by a ruling by Solicitor Karl A. Crowley, of the Postoffice Department, that charges that the conference "does not now have" funds to pay the prizes were pertinent to the Government's demand that the "sweepstakes" be barred from the mails as a "lottery."

Apologizes to Court.

Emil K. Ellis, conference attorney who had called the hearing an "inquisition," offered apologies as the hearing adjourned until tomorrow.

"Oh, you talk too damned much," snapped C. W. Hassell, Government lawyer.

Arguing against the charge that the conference lacked funds, at present, to pay the prizes, Ellis said he would prove that "we already have set aside more than $30,000 to pay these prizes and more will be set aside as the contest goes on."

"Consider the solid, inflexible reputation of Mrs. Harriman, Mrs. Chauncey Olcott and others behind this organization," he urged. "Do you think they are going to fall down on this obligation?"

"Suppose we forget who your clients are, their high character and all that," suggested Crowley. "But suppose three people meet on a street corner and organize a nonprofit membership corporation. Suppose they do not have the high sense of responsibility which you say your clients have. Is there any legal liability there?"

Cites "Character."

"The directors conducting this enterprise have a very serious responsibility," Ellis replied. "There's always a chance of people being defrauded. But you should consider the character of these directors. If the department sees no reasonable likelihood of their not paying, it has no right to accuse them of insincerity."

"You have a corporation here," Crowley replied. "Assume it is not successful. There's no way at law for a contestant to get his money."

"The law is to the contrary," asserted the New York lawyer. "The question of whether prize money is or is not paid is material only on a charge of fraud after the contest is completed. You're not charging us with fraud here; you're charging us with conducting a lottery."

To Exchange Prisoners.

Buenos Aires, April 4 (AP).—A special committee for repatriation of prisoners of the Chaco War announced tonight the interchange between Bolivia and Paraguay will begin after April 10, with the freed men crossing to their respective native countries through northern Argentina. The released prisoners will travel by railroads, along which food deposits have been established.

5 Permits Revoked, 20 Are Suspended

Revocation of five permits and suspension of 20 others were announced by the Board of Revocations and Restorations yesterday.

Back in Nashville Luke Lea Is Feted

Nashville, Tenn., April 4 (AP).—Welcomed back from prison at a banquet in his honor, Col. Luke Lea told several hundred of his friends tonight that when misfortune first overtook him he considered whether to cause his "insurance to mature and thus provide security for my wife and the dearest children who ever lived."

"I had a large amount of insurance on my life," he said, but after pondering the question decided "to face life, and each day to pray to be worthy of the love of my family and the confidence of my friends."

About 300 were seated at the banquet table and many others jammed into the room between the dinner and the speeches.

Mayor Hilary E. Howse of Nashville said that Col. Lea has done as much for Tennessee "as any one man in the last quarter of a century."

Chamberlin to Attempt Dallas-to-Paris Flight

Shreveport, La., April 4 (AP).—Clarence Chamberlin said today he planned to leave here Monday for Dallas to begin preparations for a flight from there to Paris in June to demonstrate the feasibility of sub-stratosphere schedules between the United States and Europe.

Chamberlin, who announced the flight early this week, said he hoped to take off on the anniversary of his New York-to-Berlin flight of June 4-6, 1927.

The proposed flight would be made from New York, he said, if a suitable runway is not available at Dallas.

Sodality Votes To Make Drive Upon Radicals

Three-Point Program Is Mapped at Sessions at Georgetown U.

Two hundred sodality delegates, representing 10,000 Catholic high school and college students in Washington, yesterday voted to launch a "counter-revolution" against communism.

Meeting in annual session at Georgetown University, they mapped a three-point program to block communistic advances in the United States. The students said they will (1) absolutely oppose professional agitation of communism, (2) boycott the works of authors writing sympathetically about communism, and (3) appeal for support to the masses of the people.

They will seek a united front of Catholics and non-Catholics to fight the "common foe" of all Christians.

A group study club, in which every sodality in the Capital will be represented, is to be organized immediately to "study communism and to furnish information on the subject to all schools in the District." In addition the college sodalities will co-operate in staging weekly radio broadcasts; through playlets and addresses the students hope "to explain the evils of communism and how to meet them."

Principal addresses yesterday were given by two New York priests. The Rev. Francis P. LeBuffe, Eastern representative of the National Sodality Council and business manager of the Catholic weekly, America, spoke on "What Are You Doing About Communism?" The Rev. John A. LaFarge gave talks on "Communism's Philosophy of Life" and "What to Do About Communism."

Student speakers included Francis E. Hickey and James Curtin, Georgetown; Kathryn Glavin, Trinity College; Frances Harley, Georgetown Visitation Convent, and James Kernan, Georgetown.

Other schools represented at the sessions, which were directed by the Rev. Vincent S. McDonough, of the Georgetown Sodality, were Loyola College, of Baltimore; Immaculate Seminary, Georgetown Preparatory School, Academy of the Holy Cross, Gonzaga High School, Holy Trinity High School, Immaculate Conception Academy, Notre Dame Academy, Sacred Heart Academy, St. Anthony's High School and St. Paul's Academy.

Immaculata Seminary Alumnae Plan Reunion

Alumnae of the Immaculata Seminary in Washington and in sixteen States will hold a national reunion in this city on April 17, 18 and 19, and after planning a two-year program of activities will elect a new slate of executive officers.

Plans for the reunion are being directed by Miss Ann P. Brosnan, president of Immaculata Seminary Alumnae Association, assisted by numerous committees of local alumnae.

In the absence of Immaculata resident students for the Easter holidays, the Sisters of Providence will permit the registration of guests at the seminary, which will be headquarters for the reunion exercises.

Blaze Aboard Ship Reported Checked

San Francisco, April 4 (AP).—Fire aboard the Norwegian motorship Tricolor has been checked, the vessel messaged tonight to the liner President Grant, which relayed the information to Globe Wireless, Ltd., here.

The blaze, which was discovered this morning in No. 5 hold, was controlled only after a stubborn fight of several hours by the crew. Twelve passengers and a crew of 40 are aboard the motorship.

The Japanese steamer Buenos Aires Maru, which had started a 200-mile run to the aid of the Tricolor, proceeded on its course when it learned the fire was checked.

The east-bound Norwegian steamer Dagland, however, expected to overtake the Tricolor.

Lawyer Denies Making Charge Of Rum Credit

Schwartz Asserts He Did Not Say Wholesalers 'Carry' Retailers.

Milford F. Schwartz, attorney for the Wholesale Liquor Dealers, Inc., told the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday he had no knowledge that wholesalers were "carrying" retailers by extension of undue credit.

Examination of Schwartz by the board was in pursuance of its investigation of charges that wholesalers were carrying retailers through credit. The charges grew out of statements made at a recent hearing held by the Commissioners at which it was decided to issue no new Class A retail licenses until the number of licenses fell below 300. There now are 400.

Schwartz told the beverage board that he not only did not say wholesalers were giving credit to retailers but he stated there was no truth in the report. Friday the board had questioned Manuel Davis, attorney, and Jerome McKee, former president of the Exclusive Retail Liquor Dealers Association. They, too, denied they had made the charges.

At the hearing yesterday Davis said that Schwartz had made the charges. The three seemed agreed that the charge grew out of statements made by them, but each denied his statments were responsible.

The board is conducting an investigation to determine if there are tie-ups between wholesalers and retailers which are forbidden by law. It plans to scan books of retailers. It already had examined books of wholesalers and found no basis for the "carrying" charge, members said.

Dr. Townsend Hints He May Quit Plan

By the United Press.

Dr. Francis E. Townsend hinted in his weekly newspaper yesterday that he soon may quit as head of the old age revolving pension movement.

"I feel that very soon I am going to be compelled to retire from the life I have been leading for the past two years," the elderly doctor wrote in a front page "plea" to his friends for "courage and true loyalty to our cause."

"This retirement may be very sudden," said Dr. Townsend, whose old age pension program is the subject of a Congressional investigation. "The physical frailty of a man of 70 is well known to all. Tomorrow I may not be with you."

He asked his followers not to lose faith because "of the disclosure of frailty and incompetence (or worse) of a few men."

Five Injured in Fire In Louisville Theater

Louisville, Ky., April 4 (AP).—Five persons were injured and the lives of 300 spectators endangered tonight when fire gutted a burlesque theater here. Four of the injured were treated at a hospital, while the fifth, William Reed, one of the theater performers, was given emergency treatment by police. None was seriously hurt.

Reed was burned when he attempted to tear down blazing scenery. He told police that a section of scenery burst into flames when, as part of an act, he fired a pistol backstage. All downtown fire equipment was rushed to the theater. A large crowd, attracted by the flames and the screams of spectators who fought their way out, jammed the street. The blaze was under control an hour later.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, APRIL 5, 1936

Landon Popularity Jumps to 56% Lead in G.O.P. Runaway Race

America Speaks

	November	February	Today
Landon	33%	43%	56%
Borah	26	28	20
Hoover	12	17	14
Knox	8	7	5
Vandenberg	3	4	4
Dickinson	1	1	1

Gov. Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas (right), seems to be riding the winning horse in the Republican nomination sweepstakes. Landon is far ahead of all his rivals, this week's poll shows, his combined vote being greater than that of Borah, Hoover, Knox, Vandenberg and Dickinson together. Watching the Kansas Governor lengthen his lead week by week and month by month, an interested public asks "Can he be overtaken?"

The two imponderables in the Republican race are Senator William Edgar Borah (upper left) and former President Herbert Hoover (right). They may be lagging behind at the moment in the popularity poll among Republican voters, but party conventions don't always select candidates on the basis of their popular strength, and Hoover and Borah will be powerful factors at the June convention. Does Borah want the prize for himself or another?

Kansan's Edge Gains 13% in March Poll

Borah Heads the Trailing Field of Five Seeking Republican Presidential Nomination With 20 Per cent of Returns.

By Dr. George Gallup,

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, April 4.—Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas, it was revealed here today in the institute's Nation-wide poll of Republican voters, has taken a runaway lead on his rivals for the G. O. P. presidential nomination with 56% of the votes cast for all the candidates.

In second place, but far behind the Kansas Governor, is Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, whose race for the nomination has turned into one of the most earnest pursuits of his life. Then trailing in order are former President Herbert Hoover, Col. Frank Knox, Senator Arthur Vandenberg and Senator Lester J. Dickinson.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE of PUBLIC OPINION

The institute poll shows that Landon's popular strength today, however, is greater than the combined vote for the other five leaders.

"If you would vote Republican today," the institute ballot asked, "check the candidate you would like to support."

More than 100,000 copies of the question were distributed by mail and by door-to-door interviewers. The institute probed opinion in each State, and at all income levels, exactly as demanded by the principles of correct sampling.

Landon Flag Flies In 43 States

To political strategists the Landon trend—as shown in three institute polls—has been strong and steady. In November, Landon held the Middle Atlantic States, the East and West Central States and the South. New England, the Mountain States and the Pacific Coast States went to Borah.

By last February Landon had captured New England and the Pacific Coast. Today his juggernaut moves into the last Borah stronghold, the Mountain States. The Kansan gains strength in today's poll at the expense of his three leading rivals, all of whom are down proportionately since February. He leaves them only five States among the five of them: Idaho, Utah, South Carolina and Louisiana to Borah, and Michigan to Vandenberg.

Section by section the candidates rank as follows:

	Percentage of G. O. P. Favoring
	Landon	Borah	Hoover	Knox	Vandbg.	Dickim.
New England...	55%	16%	20%	6%	2%	1%
Middle Atlantic.	57	18	17	4	3	1
East Central....	53	16	13	6	11	1
West Central...	63	22	9	3	2	1
South..........	53	24	13	6	2	2
Mountain	46	38	9	3	3	1
Pacific.........	60	17	15	4	3	1

A handful of States defy the trends indicated in the table above. One of these is Michigan, where sentiment for a native son, Senator Vandenberg, mounts to 43 per cent and gives him a clear lead over any other single candidate. Frank Knox, whose career has trailed across the East—from a birthplace in Pennsylvania to editorship in Michigan, New Hampshire and Illinois—gathers proportionately greater support in these States.

G. O. P. "Converts" Name Landon and Borah

Two important streams of voters are moving between the camps of the major parties today. One stream, made up of those who voted for Hoover in 1932, is now on Roosevelt's side. Another and somewhat larger stream, of those who voted for Roosevelt at the last election, would vote for a Republican candidate today.

The votes of such "convert" Republicans show them preponderantly for Landon, yet more favorable to Borah than the Republican party generally.

G. O. P. Voters Want Thrifty Man as Candidate

Remarks of Those Polled Show Numbers Lean Toward Economy.

A reputation for economy is the best recommendation a Republican candidate can have, in the opinion of other Republicans voting in today's poll, and the comment—"He'll give the country a balanced budget"—is virtually the highest praise today's voters accord.

"Gov. Alf Landon," submits a railroad man in Waterville, Me., "is a man with sense, who can realize what a dollar should be."

A Youngstown, Ohio, college student recommends: "Let Landon balance the budget. He's done it in Kansas."

"Landon won't waste the people's money," a clerk in Bloomington explains.

The Kansas Governor has probably benefited more than any other candidate from his party's current desire for economy in government. But voters indicate that Hoover, Knox, Vandenberg and Dickinson—as well as Landon—could be expected to make substantial slashes in government costs.

Republicans Want 'Business Man'

Most of the leading Republican candidates can be described as business men. Landon was an oil operator before he ran for Governor of Kansas. Knox and Vandenberg have been successful newspaper publishers. Even Senator Borah, who once turned down a guarantee of $100,000 a year to enter a New York law firm, can be counted a business "success."

Evidence of some such success as this voters indicate, is evidence of presidential ability, too.

A Philadelphian, now on relief, would like to vote for Knox because "He's the man who knows what to do. He's had experience as a big employer."

Another Pennsylvanian seconds the motion: "I'm for Knox because he is a corking good business man."

Gov. Landon is the choice of a Coast Guard officer, stationed at Baltimore, because "He'd make a good business man President."

Hoover is a "good man and a great business expert," according to a San Diego voter. And Borah is "a very wise and efficient business man," to a Republican in Milbank, S. Dak.

Candidate X— 'Farmer's Friend'

Another popular refrain that appears on today's ballots is the comment: "He is a friend of the farmer"—or "a friend of the workingman"—depending on whether the comment comes from a rural or an urban voter.

Much of this applause is for Borah, but Landon and the others have their share.

An Ohio farmer believes that Borah is "the farmer's best friend," while a Wyoming farmer looks to the Idaho Senator to obtain high tariffs on agricultural products. But Landon is "the farmer's friend" too, and an Indiana voter finds him "more or less conservative, but nevertheless a candidate with the proper view of the working man and the farmer."

What Makes A Candidate

The sum of all the comments received in today's poll provides an explanation of why the leading Republican candidates enjoy the positions they do. In the following tabulation the most frequent reasons for favoring each candidate are ranked in order:

1. Gov. Landon.

He balanced the budget in Kansas.

Another Popular Point Is His Strength With Farmers.

He is conservative and will uphold the Constitution.

He is for the farmers.

He is a real business man.

He is progressive.

He is a Westerner.

2. Senator Borah.

He has a record of square shooting.

He has liberal ideas.

He is the greatest Republican statesman since Teddy Roosevelt.

He is for old-age pensions.

He's the only candidate I've heard much about.

3. Herbert Hoover.

Hoover has sound principles.

Give Hoover another chance. He'll do better because of his experience.

He'll get us out of the depression.

He's for the good of the people.

4. Frank Knox.

He's the best fitted and most capable candidate.

He'll get us out of the mess we're in.

He's a business man.

5. Senator Vandenberg.

He's a liberal but not a radical.

He's voted right in the Senate.

He's the real leader of the Republican Party in the Senate.

6. Senator Dickinson.

He's the people's man.

His Republicanism can't be questioned.

From a host of other comments the following stand out as specially interesting:

An electrician in Charlotte, N. C.: "Borah's the man. He should have had the job long ago."

A housewife in San Francisco: "Borah would keep us out of the next war."

A marble-worker, Knoxville, Tenn: "Landon's my choice, but I'd vote for a man I didn't know before I'd vote for Roosevelt or Hoover."

Next Week—

Would President Roosevelt be re-elected if election were today?

The Institute of Public Opinion will report the answer to that question in next Sunday's Washington Post. Ballots from thousands of voters—representing persons in every State and every principal income group—will form the foundation of the Institute's report.

But that's not all.

Previous monthly polls on President Roosevelt's popularity have been conducted by the Institute, and together they show how his popularity has fluctuated—now up, now down—in the last two years. In the March poll the Roosevelt curve continued upward to 54 per cent. It was his highest point of popularity, as reflected in Institute polls, since February, 1935.

Since the last poll was completed the President has submitted a highly controversial tax plan. He has asked Congress for $1,500,000,000 more for relief purposes. Even the Government's response to the recent flood suffering may have had an effect upon votes.

Next week's poll will indicate whether these moves have pushed the President's popularity up or down.

4 Groups of Liberals Hold Key to Election

Institute Polls Show That Republicans Must Draw From Roosevelt's Strength With Women, Farmers, Youth and Idle.

New York, April 4.—Suppose that the Republican National Convention has just adjourned and that Gov. Landon of Kansas has been nominated for the Presidency on the G. O. P. ticket. In the convention hall at Cleveland the sweepers are sweeping up the remains of the last big demonstration. The party platform is written. The next step is to carry the campaign to the country.

What kind of campaign will the Republicans need to adopt, and to what classes of voters must they make their strongest appeals if they hope to win against Roosevelt in November?

American voters have already put much of the answer to that question on record in polls of the Institute of Public Opinion. Most of them want to support a liberal program. This is true particularly of four important classes of voters:

1. Women.
2. Farmers.
3. Young persons.
4. Persons on relief.

The prospects of the Republican party next November will depend largely on developing an appeal to win over a larger proportion of these four groups than it now has. This probably means moving toward a more liberal program.

Roosevelt's Strength In Four Groups

These four groups have been revealed, time and again in Institute polls, as the backbone of President Roosevelt's majority. In the poll reported three weeks ago in The Post, for instance, these groups gave Roosevelt the following majorities:

	Percentage Roosevelt	Favoring Rep. Cand.
All voters.	54%	46%
Women	56	44
Farmers ...	57	43
Young persons .	61	39
Reliefers ..	78	22

If the Republican candidate can raid these Democratic preserves he may be able to haul his party above that alluring fifty per cent line—to a victory in November.

Suppose again that the candidate is Gov. Landon. In today's poll he is the choice of the Republican voters in those four important groups: Women, farmers, young persons and reliefers. Republican women vote for him by the same percentage that represents total Republican opinion—56 per cent. Republican farmers are relatively more in favor of him than the all-Republican average, whereas young Republicans and those on relief are relatively less in favor of him and relatively more in favor of Borah. The vote follows:

	Percentage of G.O.P. Favoring
	Landon	Borah	Others
All G.O.P.	56%	20%	24%
Women ...	56	17	27
Farmers ..	59	22	19
Youth	49	24	27
Reliefers ..	45	29	26

In other words, Landon is a good choice to hold the vote of Republican women. He is a particularly good choice to hold the vote of Republican farmers, and possibly he might appeal to farmers of the opposite party sufficiently to weaken Roosevelt. With young Republicans and with those on relief, however, he is not quite so successful.

'Stay West,' Good Landon Slogan

If "Nominee" Landon hopes to consolidate these groups behind him, and to attract similar voters who are now attached to President Roosevelt, presumably he will have to stay out of the ultraconservatives' camp. He will have to devise a budget scheme that will not distress voters now sustained by Federal relief. He will have to find a farm policy that, while tending to balance the National budget, will win the agrarian vote. These things he probably cannot do if he lines up with the Eastern, industrial wing of his party—if he becomes "the Wall Street candidate" or anything other than "the Kansas candidate."

In brief, a useful piece of advice for Governor Landon is, "Stay West."

Already certain political objectives tug him Eastward. These objectives are two: (1) Assurance that Eastern leaders will swing support to him in the national convention, or, at least, that they will not violently oppose him; (2) The advantage of having a Vice Presidential running-mate from some section other than the Middle West.

Who's Who Votes For Landon

Republicans named in the 1934-1935 edition of Who's Who in America are somewhat more in favor of Gov. Landon for the G. O. P. nomination today than are rank and file Republicans.

That fact was established in a special cross-section survey of Who's Who voters by the Institute of Public Opinion.

Voters in this list of notables allocate about the same strength to Frank Knox, Senator Vandenberg and Senator Dickinson as do all Republicans in today's poll. But they are relatively more in favor of Herbert Hoover and relatively less in favor of Senator Borah.

	Who's Who	All G.O.P.
	Percentage	Favoring
Landon	60%	56%
Hoover	20	14
Borah	7	20
Knox	7	5
Vandenberg	5	4
Dickinson	1	1

A cross-section of Who's Who voters last January indicated they are approximately 7 to 3 against re-electing President Roosevelt.

Christ's Life Enacted In Outdoor Tableaux

America's Passion Play, in Little Town of Holy City, Will Be Witnessed by 100,000 Spectators.

By Carl Mann.

Holy City, Okla., April 4.—In a natural setting of extraordinary grandeur, as remote from the noisy conflict of the modern world as this little town is from the Nation's seething commercial centers, some 100,000 visitors will witness next Sunday the annual Wichita Mountains Easter sunrise service.

The service comprises one of the greatest outdoor spectacles in this country, comparable to the historic Passion Play at Oberammergau in Bavaria.

In 20 tableaux, the story of the birth, life, death and resurrection of Christ will be retold in a pageant which commences at 3:30 a. m., and which does not end until the sun rises.

This year, as formerly, the Public Works Administration is providing funds and labor for the erection of the necessary properties, for the vast project of the Holy City has been adjudged "in harmony with President Roosevelt's works program, and a vital part of the social life of the Southwest."

Plans Completed For a Broadcast.

But people outside of the Southwest will also this year have an opportunity to share in the great American Passion Play, for arrangements for the broadcasting of the sunrise service have just been completed. The time is 7 a. m., Eastern Standard.

Meanwhile the little town is preparing for its huge influx of reverent pilgrims. Hollywood movie "cities" may rise over night and fall in a day, once they have served as the setting for a new film. But this rustic native stone village is here to stay. Without the riotous spirit of a movie capital premier, its annual production is strictly devotional.

Nestled in the Wichita Mountains, 22 miles north of Lawton and approximately 100 miles southwest of Oklahoma City, the place gets its name from the files of the Works Progress Administration. At the Nation's Capital, among the fingered files of thousands of projects, are catalogued the blue prints and data used in construction of a group of buildings, replicas of structures in Jerusalem.

In 1934 the Federal Emergency Relief Administration allocated $12,000 in relief funds to begin construction of the first building—a central stage, on a plot of 160 acres near the center of the 61,480-acre Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve. Gradually a cluster of Biblical structures, including walls of Jerusalem, a tomb and other minor buildings arose around the central stage. The cluster of native stone buildings is located at the foot of Mount Roosevelt on a rocky knoll.

The mountain was named after Theodore of the Roosevelt clan. A gigantic natural amphitheater, with accommodations for 400,000 spectators, including parking space for automobiles, is spread out on a slope across from the Holy City. A cable fence and gulley separates the Holy City from the host of visitors who annually trek to the quaint huddle of buildings for the Easter sunrise service.

Late in 1935 an additional $67,000 was allocated through the WPA for other buildings to be added to the Holy City. Hammers, saws and concrete mixers rattle a symphony while 150 WPA workers add the finishing touches to the buildings which will be completed in time for the 1936 Easter program.

80,000 Attended Services of 1935.

Eighty thousand spectators from Oklahoma, Texas and surrounding States came here in wagons, dilapidated conveyances and polished limousines to see the 1935 service. Fourteen cities and towns were represented among the 900 members of the cast for that edition of the Easter sunrise service. The cast has been increased to 2,500 this year, representing 65 cities and towns in Oklahoma and Texas.

Donkeys, sheep, goats and other domestic animals will be used to add a dash of live colors to the annual production. An elaborate public address system will be completed before the service is scheduled to begin, Myron Groseclose, district WPA engineer of Chickasha reported. Groseclose, a graduate of the University of Oklahoma, is the designer of the structures which bear the title—Holy City.

Groseclose explained that he had been forced to dust off the family Bible and thumb its pages since he started plans for the Holy City. An able technician with a vivid imagination, the husky engineer speaks with pride in the Holy City and points out that it may stand for centuries. Groseclose also explained that the permit issued by the Biological Survey, for location of the quaint village on Federal property, specifies that no commercial enterprise shall be permitted to develop in connection with the presentation of the drama.

The Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve in which the Holy City is being completed is a wildlife laboratory under supervision of the Biological Survey and is inhabited by buffalo, deer, turkey and other game native to Southwestern United States. The area, also dotted with 32 lakes from 1 to 540 acres in size, promises to become a recreational paradise. The lakes are free for swimming and fishing and many trails and camping sites have been cleared for the more than 350,000 visitors who annually tour the Wichitas.

History of Project Includes Drama.

The history of the Wichita Mountains Easter sunrise service is a dramatic story centering around its director and originator, the Rev. A. M. Wallock, pastor of the Congregational Church in Lawton.

Born in Schonberg, a Carpathian mountain village of Austria, where his father was a store keeper, Mr. Wallock is well equipped by education and experience for the job he holds in connection with the pageant. Mr. Wallock was brought to the United States when he had reached the ripe age of one year. His parents settled in Chicago. Through the grammar school years he lived in the Windy City.

Immediately following the death of his father, the mother, brother and two sisters moved to Evanston, a suburb of Chicago. In Evanston, the diminutive and ambitious youngster, artistically inclined, entered Northwestern University. He did clerical and office work, while working for a bachelor of arts degree. With a B. A. degree, he left Northwestern and entered the Garrett Biblical Institute, a Methodist seminary also located at Evanston. Finishing his course at the institute, he served in a small church near his home city for a time and did social service work in Chicago before his footsteps turned to Oklahoma in 1918.

After a few months in the pulpit at Waukita, Okla., he left the Sooner State and landed in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he again preached the doctrines of Christianity.

He didn't like Utah and returned to accept the pastorate of a church at Crescent. Unpretentious, modest and a devout worker among his congregation, the bachelor-pastor arrived in Lawton in 1926. After assuming the pastorate of the Lawton church, the little minister began to study his surroundings.

Shortly after arriving in Lawton, he was called to a ministerial conference in Oklahoma City. There Mr. Wallock was informed that Medicine Park, a small summer resort, 16 miles north of Lawton, was literally a den of iniquity. At the little resort, Mr. Wallock was told, visitors drank the hard corn liquor of the Oklahoma hills and indulged in the pastime of rolling tiny square bones across the tables in curtained halls (the bones are better known as dice.). Other kinds of vice, it was rumored, were prevalent at the resort then, he was told. Mr. Wallock promised officers of his church attending the conference he would do what he could to relieve the situation at the allegedly bad place.

The little minister returned to Lawton. During his spare time he preached at the resort and in a few weeks had organized the Union Sunday school there. With members of his own congregation in Lawton and the Union Sunday school at the resort he climbed a hill, Easter morning, 1927, near the entrance to Medicine Park to present the first Easter service.

Lover of Drama And Accomplished.

A lover of drama, the adopted Oklahoma preacher, had studied music and art at Northwestern University. He is an accomplished pianist and artist. In the light of flares, with his little flock huddled about him on that chilly Easter morning, Mr. Wallock had begun the type of work he loved. "I believe the service then was more impressive than it is now with our powerful electric flood lights," he explains. With his small band of faithful followers he had constructed a tomb and other crude Biblical structures with which to present the first service. Sacks of cement had been donated by community business men at the resort which had been used to hold the quaint stage properties together.

The small brown, rocky peak which the preacher had selected for presentation of the service began to grow too small for the crowds at the Easter sunrise service in 1928 and 1929. Succeeding years brought thousands to the Wichita Mountains on Eastern morning.

The landowners around the hill were not asleep. They cleared away the scrub oaks and turned cow pastures into parking lots. Hot dog and cold drink stands flourished with a brisk, gold rush business for two days each year.

Signs appeared along the road—"Park Your Car Here." Barkers singing the same message exercised their lungs and rented the air of the quiet mountain side. This plan didn't fit into Mr. Wallock's scheme of things.

He was not putting on a show and didn't intend to leave loopholes for mercenary-minded individuals. The mountain where Mr. Wallock had been presenting his sunrise service was rough, rocky and covered with scrub oaks and also was surrounded by barbed-wire fences. Evidently that whetted the appetites of curiosity seekers, since they continued to come in thousands until 1932, the roads leading into Medicine Park and the service site were blocked for several miles in two directions. Traffic was a jam, such as is seldom witnessed by the hill and country people of Oklahoma.

The Easter service grew each year with the depression. But still no financial aid of any consequence came from any source. Mr. Wallock would permit no open campaign for funds.

Only Voluntary Help Accepted.

Only voluntary donations were accepted. At the service each year, cigar boxes had been placed on upright posts along the trails leading to the peak of the hill, but the cash taken in through this medium was negligible. Then came the service in 1933. Fifty thousand people were estimated to have swarmed over the mountain side to witness the portrayal of the life of Christ. Mr. Wallock had started the sunrise service alone with the little group of his special Sunday school at the resort and of Lawton in 1927, and by 1933 he had not only the pastors of most of the Lawton churches, but many surrounding communities and towns and their congregations willingly taking part.

In 1934 more than 10,000 visitors were turned away from the service due to the lack of standing room. Lawton business and civic leaders came to Mr. Wallock's rescue. They organized the Wichita Mountains Easter Sunrise Service Association and obtained a charter from the corporation commission at the State capital. The association then secured a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture at the Nation's Capital to hold the service on a plot of 160 acres on an appropriate site near the center of the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve.

In 1934 an allocation was granted through the FERA and construction was begun on Oklahoma's Holy City early in 1935. The 1935 Easter service was presented at the Holy City. Virtually all church denominations of southwestern Oklahoma have indorsed or given aid in some form during the presentation of the service during the past three years.

Legislators Help With Allocation.

Congressman Jed Johnson, of the Sixth district in Oklahoma in which the Holy City is located, and Senator Elmer Thomas, of Medicine Park, waged the battle in Washington which brought the recent allocation of $67,000 in relief funds for further improvements. Thomas and Johnson carried the project to the President several months ago when they received resolutions signed by leaders in 65 Oklahoma cities and towns, indorsing the project and requesting more funds with which to complete improvements on the site.

A twentieth century touch was added to the 1935 program at the Mountain City, when Col. Arthur Goebel, famous air ace, who spanned the Pacific in 1927 to win the Dole flight, roared above the Wichitas to write the benediction, "Christ Arose" in mile-long white smoke letters. Goebel on Easter morning again will write the benediction when "Peace On Earth" is penned across the sky above the thousands. Goebel's services are donated to the Easter Service Association by an Oklahoma oil magnate for whom the airman does aerial skywriting.

Riza Pahlavi, Iran's Shah, Finds U. S. Fun Not So Ritzy!

He Severs Ties With Us, Because of Our Manners.

In Hitler's Germany. . . . .

In Mussolini's Italy. . . . .

In almost any country except the United States. . . . .

They might have saved the feelings of the Shah of Iran, Riza Pahlavi. . . . .

But in this country they have, what do you call it? Oh, yes, the freedom of the press. And so. . . .

All the representatives of that country of the East have been called back, the Shah is very sad, and city editors, those hard-boiled individualists, are puffing out their chest and saying, "You can't intimidate me."

You've heard that story, of course. About the reporter, I mean, who was sent out by the city editor of some New York sheet to get a story about a scandal and who ran up against what Damon Runyon would call a very tough guy, indeed. And the tough guy swore, and swung his fists, and told the reporter where he got off. And so the reporter called his office and told what had happened and the city editor, a fat guy in a swivel chair, said, "Go back and get the story. Tell that guy he can't intimidate me."

City editors are all like that and most papers are like their city editors and so, thank to the indomitable spirit of the reportorial craft, if you want to do any diplomatic business with the country that used to be called Persia you'll have to do it by cable for all the boys of the Iranian diplomatic corps are now, or soon will be, on the free sea.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, can do nothing about it.

Nobody can do anything about it.

The press is free, and the press made fun of the Iranian Minister, who thought a yellow license plate with the letters DPL really meant something outside of restricted parking spots in Washington, and who happened to meet a couple of other fellows who never had heard of diplomatic immunity.

The combination didn't go well together.

There won't be any war. We are a big country. Iran is a little country. And the constitution says nothing can abridge the freedom of the press. And so the Shah can call his gang back, and be very hurt, and Mr. Hull can pull a long face, but after that there seems nothing can be done about the matter.

It all started when Ghaffar Djalal, the Iranian Minister, went for a drive in the country. He happened to go to Elkton, Md., the place where people get married on very little provocation. He, however, was already married; he even had his wife with him.

Bowling along over the pleasant highway at a high rate of speed the minister was completely oblivious of anything, or anyone, else on the road. A whistle blew. The minister did not stop. It blew twice. Again he kept going.

But a big guy in a blue suit and a silver badge came bowling along on a motorcycle and said, probably, "Where do you think you're going? To a fire? Pull over, wise guy."

Anyway, the guy in the car was arrested.

There was a fuss.

There was talk of diplomatic immunity and such. There was also talk about speed laws and telling it to the judge. There was, according to some reports, loud discourse, harsh language, and the clinking of handcuffs. The latter has been established.

Djalal was taken off to the clink. Even as you and I. If he was such a big fellow, after all he could fix things later, this being the great democracy that it is.

Instead of trying to "fix" the ticket with the ward "poll," the minister protested to the State Department, with the result that two members of Elkton's finest lost their jobs, got them back, lost them again.

This made a big commotion. The papers all printed it and couched their language in neither sympathetic nor diplomatic language.

The cops, of course, had it coming to them, because the law says that diplomats are immune from the laws of this country, and they are very jealous of this prerogative and live up to it to the full—during prohibition and now.

Secretary Hull said he was sorry. So did the cops. So did the chief of police. The reporters didn't. They sort of felt that if they got pinched for speeding, so should Iranian ministers, and this, too, was the attitude that Mr. Hull took. At least, suavely and diplomatically, he hinted that foreign diplomats should try to obey American laws.

Djalal, who said he was aware of no law violation, was recalled to Iran in January.

He made no secret of the fact there was displeasure in Teheran over the treatment he had received.

The Persian government sent no Minister to succeed him. The legation here has been headed by Hossein Ghods, charge d'affaires. Hoessein Gadime and Jaroslav Smetanka are the consuls at New York and Chicago, respectively.

The anger which had smouldered in Iran (Persia) since the two Maryland cops arrested the Iranian minister burst into the open.

Turning a diplomatic cold shoulder to the United States, Iran closed its legation and consulates in this country. Its diplomats in Washington and consular officers in New York and Chicago packed up to leave for home.

Persia was hurt, authoritative sources said, because of articles in the American press which were considered discourteous to the Shah and his country. Apparently, however, the diplomatic reproof was a direct outgrowth of the Maryland incident.

While the State Department refrained from commenting on the action of the Iranian government in closing its legation it regretted that the Persian government should have taken offense at articles written in the American press about the Iranian monarch and his representatives in this country.

Neither the Shah, Riza Khan Phalevi, nor his cabinet officers, of course cannot visualize from Teheran how the United State Government has no control over the press in this country.

When some time ago the last Iranian Minister to the United States took up with the State Department the matter of certain articles which the Minister considered disparaging to the Shah, he was astonished to be informed that the Government was not in a position either to stop such articles or compel the newspapers to apologize for what was written.

Neither could the Teheran foreign office understand that a reference to the Shah's humble origin was not meant as an insult in this country, where every Congressman boasts of a "log-cabin" background.

The closing of the offices is not a break in diplomatic relations, because the American Legation at Teheran remains open.

It is not the first incident between the two countries. Observers here understand Persia has never forgotten the demands the United States made when an American vice consul, Maj. Robert W. Imbrie, was killed in a mob riot in Teheran in 1924.

The United States insisted upon

But We Are Too Proud to Fight for Press' Freedom.

an apology from Persia, indemnity of $60,000 for the widow, punishment for the persons considered guilty, a guard of honor headed by two generals to accompany the body to the sea coast, a salute of 11 guns, payment of $110,000 to cover the cost of sending a cruiser to bring the body home.

Iran has been rather unfortunate in the choice of its diplomatic representatives in this country. Many have become involved in unpleasant incidents with police authorities, the last of which was the arrest of Djalal.

This incident, it is admitted in Washington diplomatic quarters, would not have taken the proportion it reached had it not been for the high-strung temperament of the Iranian representative and the irrepressible comments of the irrepressible press.

There have been quite a few incidents between representatives of foreign countries and police authorities in various States of the Union. These incidents for the most part were caused by the lack of understanding on the part of local policemen of the prerogatives and rights of foreign representatives.

As a rule, these incidents have been settled to the satisfaction of offended diplomats, who realized that policemen outside the District of Columbia do not necessarily know what diplomatic immunity means, and the aggressive attitude some of the members of the Diplomatic Corps took when arrested for an infraction of traffic regulations was the main cause of such incidents.

In order to remedy these irksome conflicts, the State Department has now issued special identity cards informing the authorities of the various States of the rights of the foreign representatives and the penalties involved in the arrest of such people.

Final Links Now Being Forged In 'Round-World' Air Routes

By the Associated Press.

Manila, April 4.—Within the next few days it is expected that the final links in around-the-world aviation, with Manila as a junction point of the aerial network, will be forged.

Pan-American Arways' conquest of the Pacific with giant clipper ships, forged one of the most important links in the globe-girdling chain.

Three links remain to be closed—from Manila to Borneo; from Macao, China, southward, and from Tokyo to Manila. Already these lines are under construction.

Wings Around the World.

At present, an air-minded traveler may go around the world with but few short breaks. One of these breaks will be sealed when the American clippers continue the transpacific flights from Manila across the China Sea.

A passenger, bent on circling the globe by air would cross the Pacific in a clipper to Macao; thence by land to catch a British plane at Canton for Europe via India; Dutch or French airlines to Lisbon; French or German planes down the African coast and across the south Atlantic to Brazil; and finally, Pan-American to the United States and cross-continent to Alameda, Calif., the transpacific hopping-off point.

Island Links Planned.

Some aviation enthusiasts here believe the final link in the world chain will be forged by the Dutch, who contemplate extending their line from Borneo to Manlia. This hookup would be comparatively easy, since the planes could follow the Philippine Islands in comparative safety.

At present there is an air connection between Manila and the southernmost islands, Sulu. This is the Iloilo Negros air express. Its southern terminal to Davao, within easy distance of Borneo, and Java, both stations on the Dutch lines. The trip from Manila to Borneo would require a day and a half.

Japan is said to be planning extension of their airlines from Formosa to Siam via Hongkong. Such a line would connect with the clippers at Macao. It would bring Tokyo within six days of the United States.

Old Age Pension Plan Flaws Are Revealed

Grave Economic Fallacies, They Find, Underlie the Doctor's Promises of $200 Per Month to Those Past 60.

By Laura Vitray.

One more gorgeous economic bubble that floated above the American horizon is about to burst—this time leaving a host of aged men and women, with a slight film over their eyes, gazing feebly into the upper air strata to discover what has become of the rainbow hues by which they were mesmerized.

As usual, they were not the bubble-blowers, but only the crowd that gathered round, thrilled to the barker's eloquence, and threw their pennies into the ring.

They are the Townsendites, and it must not be said of them that they were any more gullible than their grandchildren. A few years ago these grandchildren were tossing not dimes but dollars after a Wall Street bubble that grew so big it looked like an interplanetary balloon, and concerning which its blowers declared that its sides were non-crack rubber and that it could go on stretching forever and a day. It was finally punctured by the economic pinpoint, and not only it, but all the dollars disappeared.

Bubble-blowing, though, has not yet seen its final day.

A Letter From Back Home.

A few weeks ago a young man in an Eastern city who has been sending a weekly allowance home to his parents in California for a number of years—an allowance large enough to take care of their current needs and to build them up a sizable bank account for a rainy day—received a joyful letter from the old folks back home.

"We have just bought a swell Packard and a summer bungalow, Johnnie, the letter ran, "and we're having the time of our lives cavorting around like a couple of kids. You may have thought we had lost our pep and were running on one cylinder now, just because we had passed our prime. But our stay-at-hominess was only due to the fact that we were afraid you might hit hard times and the money might give out. Now we are stepping out, son, like a couple of birds in the barnyard, bent on making the most of the sun and the chicken feed. You can bet your life we are having a wonderful time!"

The son, whose business had been moving very slowly lately, was upset by that letter, and he answered his parents airmail. Of course, he did not wish them to think he grudged them a little fun. Still, their sudden opulence was a mystery to him. So he tactfully inquired where the wealth was coming from.

A few days later he learned. Now that the Townsend Old Age Revolving Pension Plan was about to dump $200 monthly into each of their pocketbooks, the old folks saw no further reason to pinch pennies. They probably would not belong to the land of the living so very long, they had saved and scrimped most of their lives, and now economy was unnecessary they were making up for the lost time by spending what had accumulated.

A Congressman Meets an Old Lady.

Early last September a United States Congressman was making a speech in his home district somewhere in the Middle West. When the meeting was over a trembling old lady of 75 or 80 stepped up to him.

"Congressman," she said, "you talked mighty fine tonight, but there was one thing you said that made me feel awful bad. I just can't get over it!"

The speaker was amazed. "Why, what in the world was that?" he asked. "I don't recall saying anything that could possibly have hurt you."

"You said that Congress wouldn't convene until January 3," the old lady explained.

"Why yes, that's true. That's the law. It will convene January 3, all right. But——"

The old lady wiped the tears from her eyes. "They told me," she whispered, "that it would meet in October, and make the Townsend plan law, and I'd have my first payment the first of November. So I give my house away to a nephew, because I didn't want the work of taking care of it any more, and now I've spent almost all my money. If I don't get the money when they said, I don't know what's going to become of me."

Last week, on Capitol Hill in Washington, a committee of Congressmen, headed by Representative C. Jasper Bell, of Missouri, began a serious investigation of Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., a "non-profit" organization incorporated under the laws of the State of California, with Dr. F. E. Townsend and Mr. R. E. Clements as its cofounders, and many millions of old folks, from Bangor, Me., to San Diego, now numbered among its financial contributors.

The "non-profit" angle is just another of those confusing technicalities of the law perhaps, for in a letter Townsend wrote to Clements, and which was offered in evidence the other day, the friend of the aged informed his confere concerning their plan: "It looks to me as if there might be millions in it."

They Could Just Divide Up!

As a matter of fact, as it developed at the Congressional hearing, the California statute under which old-age revolving pensions was incorporated, is one of the few on statute books anywhere which gives the founders carte-blanche, if they should tire of the scheme, to dissolve the corporation and divide the accrued assets among themselves. The nonprofit clause in the law means simply that the organization may not engage in any business enterprise which would result in profits to the vast army of members who contribute regular dues.

Mr. Clements, who has already tired of Old Age Revolving Pensions and resigned, assured the committee that such a dividing up was farthest from his mind. That is undoubtedly true. The fact remains that of the million-and-a-half or more dollars poured into the society's coffers by old people, only a couple of hundred thousand remain, and that no accounting of expenditures under the law is required.

Huge sums besides, it seems, have been written on and off the books of the Prosperity Publishing Co., of which Clements was the chief, and which supplied reading matter to advocates of the Townsend Old-Age Pension Plan. The publishing company sells everything—from a newspaper, "The Townsend Weekly," to "campaign buttons" for members to wear, booklets on proper conduct at Townsend club meetings, old-age pension transfer patterns for windshields, leaflets, placards and pamphlets dealing with the cause. Petitions to be signed and sent Congressmen are one of the few pieces of printed matter it distributes free.

Old-age pensions are a splendid thing, as no sensible person would deny. What is more, they are being written into the laws of our own land, as into those of foreign countries. Youth cannot wash its hands of those valiant old men and women who, when their long toil is ended, discover that their pockets are empty still. Sound social legislation is rapidly seeing to it that they shall have a better break than they had in the past. Canada now pays its indigent aged a pension of $20 a month; in Australia it is $18; in Denmark, $15; in England, $10.53; in France, $3.92.

Our own social security act, which recently became law, provides that the Federal Government shall match the pension sum granted under the law of any individual State. A number of States already have pension laws. California, where the Townsend Plan first saw the light of day, has a $35-a-month maximum old-age pension.

Why are elderly men and women not content with the Governmental provisions that are being taken for them? Why have they flocked unquestioningly to the banner of a Dr. Townsend?

Optimism America's Basic Philosophy.

The answer, it seems, is both historical and psychological. Historically, America is the land of plenty—particularly to those who lived the major part of their lifetime before the recent depression began. Traditionally, Americans have believed that it was foolish to scrimp over-much in the midst of abundance, that not only might one safely live and neglect to save, but that it was even safe to go ahead and mortgage future credit with installment plan purchases. This faith has been the backbone of our national economy, and in many ways it has worked well.

People in Europe, whence abundance long since fled, have always been used to pinching the pennies, putting the gold coins away in a sock for a rainy old age, and even toiling to amass a 'dot' or nest-egg for their sons and daughters when they were grown, so that they might not face the business of breaking into adult occupations empty handed.

Americans reasoned it the other way around. They lavished money on their children while they were small, gave them a fine home and an excellent education, blew in the last dollar on the preliminaries—then launched them into the roseate clouds surrounding the land of plenty, with the warning they must fly by their own wings.

Children Should Support Their Parents.

If, subsequently, the parents themselves became impoverished, they regarded it as the bounden duty of their children adequately to provide for them. And, with few exceptions the children did—until the bubble-bursting of 1929 upset the happy scheme of things.

Now here is where the psychological factor enters, and it is an important one. For the most part, the older folks did not approve the wild goings-on which preceded the 1929 debacle. They were fearful when they saw their sons and daughters risk their all in the riotous speculations of Wall Street. The elders believed in spending, but of gambling they had a sacred horror. The gin-drinking, whoopee-making era that went with unearned profits forever increasing gave them a sad presentiment of disaster that was to come.

When the disaster came, it dragged them and their own carefully invested savings along with it. For that fact the younger generation was to blame. The wise tactics which had built the land of plenty had been abandoned by youth, and the old folks bore the heaviest brunt.

Since then the younger people have retained at least the ray of hope that times would eventually improve, that prosperity would return, that their own strong arms and clever brains would win for them again a pleasurable existence.

For those whose brawn and brains were spent there was nothing at all to look forward to. Social legislation did not move fast enough.

The sort of hopelessness that made the Germans, hungry and ill-clad, listen to the Pied Piper chantings of a man like Hitler, whom all the rest of the world branded as a weakling—was the sort of hopelessness which prepared elderly American minds for the coming of an economic Messiah.

Dr. Townsend Was the Answer.

To answer their wishfulness, the Messiah came.

Symbolic of his great movement, which was to capture the imaginations and catch the dimes of millions of persons past their prime, was the odd fact that the new faith had a movie town for its cradle spot.

On January 24, 1934, there were filed in Hollywood, Calif., the incorporation papers of Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd. The purposes of the society sounded like a new talkie plot: To obtain for every person, rich or poor, who had passed the age of 60, a monthly pension of $200, only providing that he or she agree to spend the entire sum in the month in which it was received, and to give up all gainful occupation.

To be sure, the society did not itself propose to pay such sums—it merely offered to advance, by every legitimate means, the day when such a pension should be granted the old folks under the law. That the work might be speeded those who would eventually profit were asked to bolster the cause by their voluntary contributions.

The man who offered himself to them in this great enterprise was Dr. Townsend, an elderly physician who had been markedly unsuccessful in the art of money-making, so that he himself faced penury as the lot of his last days. The kindly doctor's benevolent smile was all that was needed to draw old people after him.

Fortunately for the "cause," the unworldly physician was not quite alone. The incorporation papers reveal, as incorporation papers must, a required three names. They were Dr. F. E. Townsend himself, his brother, Walter Townsend, a porter at the Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood, and one R. E. Clements, a promoter, who had proved his promotion propensities by a number of successful real estate booms.

Walter Townsend, so present-day investigators declare, was only a "dummy" in the papers, to satisfy the law. Dr. Townsend was the "front." Mr. Clements was the brains behind the plan.

Happily no capital investment was required by law in the formation of an organization like this one, existing merely for the advancement of human welfare. Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements supplied none. The initial assets of Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., were something less than zero, for though the doctor, out of his own slim finances, paid the $100 registration cost, the fees of the lawyers who drafted the incorporation papers were charged on the books of the society as a deficit that must be met. "Capital deficit" is perhaps the bookkeeping name for it.

For all its moneyless beginnings and its gold-reaping objectives, the economic scheme of the Townsend Plan was simplicity with a capital "S." It was something the old people of the Nation, though not savants, could readily understand.

In a time when money is hard to find, it is apparent that $200 a month for 10,000,000 persons past the age of 60, cannot be raised by taxing the income of the average citizen. All taxes are already far too high, as even the old folks themselves are aware. The only way to raise the money is by some negligible tax on something other than immediate objects of daily necessity—a tax somewhere where it would never be felt, where the yield would be high and nobody really "hurt."

Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements proposed to place it on a sort of economic "abstraction," identified as the total number of transactions taking place in our Republic in the course of a year. Anytime anything passed hands in any way a 2 per cent tax would forthwith be levied. It might be merely a paper transfer of stocks and bonds in New York's financial area, or it might be the gift of a diamond bracelet from a father to his daughter who was a bride. It might be the purchase or sale of a department store or of a poodle dog. Society itself is built upon a multiplicity of transactions, which, viewed theoretically do not immediately convert themselves into meat, clothing and a roof over one's head. Many of these transactions are legally recorded, others would depend on the good will of the citizenry to report in the old folks' behalf.

The total number of transactions in this country in 1929, according to Dr. Townsend's questionable computations based on Federal Reserve figures for that year, represented a sum of something like $1,300,000,000,000. A 2 per cent tax on such a sum—figure it out for yourself—would take care of everyone who needed it.

Even though business has suffered since 1929, the total volume of transactions is still enormous. Transacting is inherent in the nature of man.

Dr. Townsend's idea of a bounty without a burden on anyone was pleasing to old people without resources, as were the other suggestions with which he bolstered his plan. One of these was that by spending money they received instead of hoarding it, they would be helping to "revolve" the national wealth, provide a market for manufactures, increase jobs and help get the whole economic machinery rolling again. The other was that by abandoning the jobs many of the 10,000,000 over 60 still held, they would be giving youth its opportunity, taking boys and girls off the streets and putting them to work, furnishing an antidote for waywardness and for despair.

In a word, they were urged to help others while "helping themselves."

There Was a Catch to It.

The difficulty of helping themselves to so much money did not immediately appear. It was that no such transaction sum as $1,300,000,000,000 dollars existed to be taxed. Figures that added to make such a total represented the same item of wealth passing hands many times, instead of so many separate and clean-cut operations. If a 2 per cent tax were levied each time anything changed hands, it would spell appalling taxes to ultimate consumers.

Thus a farmer sells a steer and pays 2 per cent; the steer's hide is sold to a tannery and another 2 per cent is paid; the tannery sells the leather to a shoe factory, that's 2 per cent more; the factory to a wholesaler, 2 per cent; the wholesaler to the retailer, 2 per cent; the retailer to the customer, 2 per cent again.

Or no, the customer's tax would not really be 2 per cent. It would be 2 per cent on a selling price arrived at by a process of pyramiding all the other 2 per cent taxes onto the original cost plus profits to the farmer, factory and merchants.

What that means is, that no matter where or how the tax is levied, it would have to come out of the income of the man gainfully employed.

By the 1930 census it is estimated that there are in this country, out of a total population of 122,775,000, some 10,000,000 men and women past 60. Perhaps not more than 8,000,000 would accept a pension. In order to provide these with $200 a month, the ultimate consumer, under such a program, would forfeit from 40 to 60 per cent of all he earned.

Such a pension program would require a direct annual expenditure by the Federal Government of 19,200 billion dollars. Adding to this 800 million for costs of administering the vast fund, we have a round total of 20 billions.

Tidy amounts like this cannot be plucked from trees, nor manufactured by clever bookkeeping. They can be got only by raiding the national income, which was 50 billions in 1934, according to the United States Chamber of Commerce.

And how about the Townsend battle cry that the old folks, by spending every cent they received, would increase the national income?

Business Would Be Paralyzed.

To begin with, the mere levying of a 2 per cent transaction tax would tend to paralyze business and industry, and would result in a shrinkage of both production and employment, students of economics point out.

A large number of the transactions on the security and produce exchanges are carried on for a profit of much less than 2 per cent, and would therefore be dropped. Firms which produce their own supplies would seek to market them themselves, doing away with wholesale and retail middlemen, since every time the merchandise changed hands a new tax would be imposed. The new set-up would cause a fresh wave of unemployment at the same time that it decreased the tax plan's yield by reducing the number of transactions. In the process of elimination many businesses would be ruined.

Chiefly the small enterprises would suffer. For enormous firms, like the Ford Motor Co., the chain groceries, the mail order houses, would be able to transfer merchandise on their books from one depot to another, without any legal transaction that could be taxed. The chain grocery could thus sell its wares so far below those offered by the individual merchant that the latter would be forced to close his doors. Everywhere, the little man would be forced into bankruptcy.

As for the Townsend theory, so pleasureable to the old folks' ears, that by spending their pensions they would be adding to national purchasing power and thus increasing the demand for goods and the number of jobs, this too is based wholly upon fallacy. The process would be be one of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." What old Mrs. Smith received and spent would have been removed from the pocket of young Mr. Brown, who consequently would spend that much less. The total spending would be just the same.

You Can Increase The Money Supply

Of course the supply of money in actual circulation can be readily increased by starting the presses working in the United States Bureau of Printing and Engraving. That is not exactly what the old folks have in mind.

University of Chicago economists who analyzed the meaning and effects of the Townsend plan declared it could not possibly be financed without throwing over all monetary security and indulging in a currency or credit inflation to the tune of $15,000,000,000 per annum.

Such an inflation would have the effect not only of slashing the buying power of the working man, but of making the $200 monthly pension itself so meaningless that the old folks might find themselves unable to live on it. Like the people in Germany's post-war inflation times, they might discover it took a suitcase full of greenbacks a day to keep the home pot boiling.

Too bad to blow the cold air of economic reality onto a soap-bubble heaven! Few of those who have attended Townsend rallies throughout the country have allowed disillusioning arguments to penetrate to them. They are happy in the expectation of joys to come, and that happiness helps them to endure today's misery. They could do without the $200 better than without the hope and the dream. That too is comparable to conditions in Hitler's Germany, where the true force of the elementally weak Nazi regime is its hypnotic optimism.

Nor did the captains of Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., let mere fact deter them from pushing forward a lofty enterprise. The parent organization, of which Dr. Townsend and R. E. Clements were the sole dictators and guides, rapidly spawned a nation-wide series of Townsend clubs, destined to exert such an influence on national affairs that Congressmen themselves trembled and shrank from opposing a plan they knew to be utterly impracticable.

Six Million Townsendites!

Soon after the organization's inception we see its initial deficit written off, and salaried organizers in many parts of the country building up local units, the members of which paid regular dues for the advance of the project. We find these Townsend clubs, to which 6,000,000 old people now belong, operating on a "permit" from the parent body, rather than on a charter which would give them a vote in the public acts and policies of Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd.

As Mr. Clements admitted to the Congressional investigators, he and Townsend "did not wish to give them any voice whatsoever in the parent organization." Instead, in the terms of their permit, the clubs and their officers "pledged themselves to well and faithfully serve the organization and to attend to its orders and rules."

Possibly on this phase of the Townsend movement the charge has been based that it is "the greatest fascist threat in this country today." It is not precisely "taxation with representation."

Not only did the Townsend organization acquire a Washington headquarters, but "contact men," Mr. Clements told the Congressional committee, were chosen by the local clubs and paid $75 a week to come to Washington on visits, during which they called upon their Congressmen and "educated" them in the necessity for sponsoring legislation which would bring about the success of the $200 pension plan.

Petitions (furnished to the clubs free) poured into the offices of Senators and Representatives like snowflakes.

Clubs were urged to bring out the vote for candidates who would support the Townsend cause. Thus Congressional candidates in a number of cases declared themselves for it. Townsend and Clements made speeches in the campaign of at least one Representative. All of which, Mr. Clements assured the Congressional inquisitors, who harried him with references to the corrupt practices act, was neither lobbying nor direct political activity, but mere earnest effort of Townsendites to bring about a happy issue for their cause.

While Townsend local chiefs led Townsend members in prayer, while orators with a swell in their voices told Gold Star mothers they had "given their sons together with their life's blood" and that now they were entitled to the Nation's gratitude at the rate of $200 per month, lawmakers in the Nation's Capital worried over the impossible plan, and sought sly substitutes for it which might satisfy the old folks' demands.

In the last Congress the Townsend Plan was represented by two bills, both introduced by Representative John S. McGroarty, of California, who also split with Dr. Townsend this week. The first provided for $200 incomes to those over 60, regardless of their financial situation. John D. Rockefeller was just as eligible under the terms of this bill as was the beggar woman on the street corner.

New Bill Won't Provide $200.

The derision that greeted such a proposal may have been a factor in inducing the bill's author to amend it in this one important regard, as he did in a number of others.

In his second bill, old persons with an annual income of more than $2,400 were stricken from the list of eligibles, and as for the amount of the pension, it was no longer $200 a month—though many old people are still unaware of that change—but was merely set down in the terms of the bill as a sum "not exceeding $200 per month." There is a vast difference, of course. The amount to be paid, under the provisions, was to be made dependent on the amount that could be raised by taxation.

Old Age Revolving Pensions "economists," including Representative McGroarty, must have got to thinking about the possibility which we have discussed here that there would be fewer and fewer transactions to tax, once a tax on transactions got under way. People now transacting business, they feared, might seek cover in bookkeeping technicalities which made their operations hard to uncover—or else cease transacting business altogether out of sheer perversity, or bankruptcy or other cause.

So they had put their heads together to find supplementary methods for raising the pension sums. The 2 per cent transaction tax was reinforced by a 2 per cent tax (in addition to all existing taxes) on all inheritances and gifts in excess of $500, and by a supplement to the present Federal income tax, adding one-tenth to each individual tax bill, collections to be made monthly.

McGrority Would Give Old $37.50.

The revised McGroarty bill, still in committee, calls for $200-a-month maximum, but a study of its provisions has led statisticians to compute that persons receiving pensions would not really collect by it more than $37.50 per month.

Meanwhile, the Congressional spotlight has been turned, not on those acres of gold promised the aged by Dr. Townsend and his collaborator, R. E. Clements—but on the dimes and quarters and dollars these gentlemen have collected from the faithful.

Wealth has been rolling, but it has been rolling in the wrong direction, they believe. Much of it has rolled out of sight, forever.

What has become of it, they demand. Does it figure on the books of Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., as salaries and expense money for the promoters, as lobbying funds, political campaign money—or just how?

Perhaps it is unimportant. The Townsend leaders themselves have recently split, and the organization may soon pass into the limbo of all similar visionary economic schemes.

What will remain is upward of 10,000,000 old folks with nothing but a vanished hope.

And that is a big—an ugly—human fact to face.

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

National Affairs

F. D. R.

Gay After Week's Cruise

A small yacht, flying the United States flag, and the blue and white Presidential emblem, anchored in Nassau's clear green harbor on Tuesday, and Sir Bede Clifford, Governor General of the Bahamas; Lady Clifford, and the American Consul at Nassau and Mrs. Frank Henry boarded the craft. A tall, broad-shouldered man, deeply tanned by the sun, greeted them warmly, and the party went in to luncheon.

It was the first official function given by the President on his new flagship, the U. S. S. Potomac, and it was a gay party. The President, looking rested after a week's fishing cruise, was in high spirits. His laugh resounded over the ship, and his repartee flashed in the old Roosevelt manner. Then the President's secretaries and a group of White House correspondents, who flew over from Miami Beach, joined the group, and a buffet luncheon was set up for them.

Later Mr. Roosevelt held a press conference, although he warned the correspondents he had no news. But he admitted that the fishing had been great, the best he has enjoyed since becoming President. The prize catch was a 27-pound "mystery" fish, a cross between a bluefish and an amberjack, which no one in the Presidential party could identify. The President said he was having it frozen in ice and would bring it back to the Smithsonian. And he hoped they wouldn't tell him that it was just a common variety of fish, but something very extraordinary.

From Nassau the President set out for Tongue of the Ocean, a mirror-like lake, 30,000 feet deep in some places, surrounded by coral reefs. In wires back to Secretary McIntyre at Miami Beach, he reported the fishing there "excellent."

The President expects to put in at Port Everglades, his starting point, today or tomorrow, and then go to Warm Springs, Ga., for a few days before returning to the Capital.

Senate

Harsh Names for Hearst

A political name calling battle such as the country has not seen since the picturesque Johnson-Coughlin-Long exchange of insults a year ago amused and angered the Senate, press, and public last week. Members of Senator Hugo Black's lobby committee hurled abusive epithets at William Randolph Hearst and the publisher and his editorial writers came back with taunts about the "Blackguard" committee's fishing expedition into private files.

Senator Sherman Minton, Democrat, of Indiana, opened the hostilities in the Senate on Monday with an attack on Hearst's injunction suit to restrain the committee from using the telegrams they have already subpenead or obtaining any more of his messages.

Denying that the committee is infringing on any newspaper's constitutional right, as charged in Hearst editorials, Senator Minton said:

"The freedom of the press to Hearst means only the license to traduce and villify public officers as swine and traitors to their country.

"We are a better breed of swine than Hearst and his pusillanimous pen-pusher, the writer of this editorial."

Dudley Field Malone's wire to the committee protesting against its "blanket seizures of confidential telegrams" brought from Minton:

"When we reach the point in this country where there is nobody left but you and William Randolph Hearst to defend our liberties, we had better give the country back to the Indians."

But the best Senate show of the week was yet to come. On Tuesday and Wednesday, before crowded galleries, Senator Lewis Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, another member of the lobby committee, made the most bitter attack of the current series upon the California publisher.

Reviewing Hearst's record, he charged him with operating newspaper "sweatshops," called him an American Fascist with leanings toward Hitler, accused him of getting documents by stealing, bribery and intimidation, and expressed amazement that he should be getting the support of other publishers in his suit.

"After all the vilification and abuse to which he has been subjected by his fellow newspaper men of this country, Hearst has at last reached the position of leadership and is today the plumed knight leading the American newspaper fraternity in the protection of their constitutional rights."

While Elisha Hanson, counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, was arguing in the District Supreme Court Tuesday that Mr. Hearst's injunction suit should not be dismissed, Schwellenbach was shouting in the Senate:

"Hanson is today, and always has been, just a stooge for William Randolph Hearst and the rest of the newspaper fraternity of this country who believe that newspapers should be run upon the basis and theory of a sweatshop."

Three salary reduction of 10 per cent each were put into effect on Hearst papers while the publisher was building himself a $15,000,000 Bavarian castle at Wyntoon, Calif., the Senator said.

Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican Presidential candidate, was brought into the controversy when Swellenbach said that while Wisconsin News employes were striking because of Hearst publishing methods and $15 to $27 wages, "the sage of San Simeon and Wynton was coming to Topeka, rolling in there in the luxury of a private car, in order that he might choose a new President for the common people of this country."

From his tent at San Simeon, the publisher sent out the following retort:

"Senator Swellenbach is not making charges. He is confessing guilt. He is hiding behind a cuttlefish cloud of blackguard vituperation and falsification. He is the prize polecat of his polecat committiee."

As the week ended, Senator Black seemed assured of getting $10,000 to hire a lawyer to fight the Hearst injunction suit for the committee. A bill was jammed through the Senate authorizing a special $10,000 legal fee, and the House Rules Committee, under pressure from Democratic leaders, agreed to ruch the legislation to the floor.

If the courts uphold Mr. Heart, Mr. Black told the Rules Committee, it will "absolutely paralyze the legislative function and subordinate the Congress to the courts." Backing up Senator Black, Democratic Floor Leader Bankhead told the Rules Committee the case will be taken to the Supreme Court if necessary.

The inquiry will be resumed tomorrow, with the representatives of the Crusaders, anti-New Deal group, on the stand. The field investigation, during which 5,000,000 telegrams, taken from the Western Union and Postal Telegraph files, were examined was completed last Monday.

Tel. & Tel.

Pres. Gifford Explains

While the Senate was defending its investigation of lobbies, Walter S. Gifford, $206,000-a-year president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., was discussing the ethics of lobbying with Samuel Becker, special counsel for the Federal Communications Commission, in its third week of inquiry into the A. T. & T.

Mr. Gifford, under questioning by Becker, said it is improper to send telegrams signed by persons who haven't consented that their names be used, and it is also wrong to threaten Congressmen that they will lose the votes of the directors or stockholders of a corporation. But it is absolutely ethical to prepare a speech for a busy member of Congress, and it is all right to have legislators, who are after all "prospective customers," met at trains and arrange hotel accommodations for them.

Gifts are a matter of degree, the chief of the world's largest corporation said. It is perfectly proper to give a legislator a cigar, and all right to take him to the theater if you also go to the performance. Even if you can't go and just give him the tickets, it is "only a little bit wicked."

Most of this testimony was given on Tuesday. By Thursday Mr. Gifford was ready to re-examine A. T. & T. lobbying practices to decide whether they should be reformed. He said it had never occurred to him before that there was anything wrong in A. T. & T. agents meeting Congressmen at trains and helping them with accommodations and telephone installations. But "now I am not sure that it is such a good thing."

The A. T. & T., Mr. Gifford told the inquiry, is run in its own interest and in the public interest, which is the "same thing." The legislative practices of his company were "very high," the president said, but he would see if they could be raised "any higher."

It was brought out Wednesday that the A. T. and T. has a special New York staff which studies all Federal and State legislation. It examines 5,000 to 10,000 bills a year and has "taken action" on 5,696 since 1920. It has catalogued members of Congress and candidates on how they felt about utilities and Government ownership, and it has blocked several House and Senate investigations of A. T. & T. Its last successful effort in this regard was in 1931 when a resolution of Senator James Couzens failed of adoption and E. S. Wilson, of A. T. & T., reported in a memo to Gifford:

"Gentleman Jim, from Michigan, used every means he could think of to get this passed, but it didn't come up for action and just died."

Townsend

Millions—But for Whom?

"There might be millions in it." So gray-haired, elderly Dr. Francis E. Townsend told his shrewd promoter partner, Robert E. Clements, in a letter outlining a plan for collecting money from middle-aged Utopian dreamers for the $200 a month pension scheme.

And there was millions in it. Today the 7,000 Townsend clubs have a 10 cents a month dues-paying membership of 3,500,000, and more than $1,000,000 has poured into the coffers of Old Age Revolving Pensions Ltd., it has been brought out in the current investigation of Townsendism by the House.

But the flood of dimes is about over. As the House inquiry continues to reveal the inside workings of the movement and the schism in the high command grows, Townsend club members see the end of the rainbow.

The congressional sponsor of the old age pension plan, 74-year-old Representative John Stevens McGroarty, Democrat, broke with Dr. Townsend Monday, when the latters' weekly rebuked him for suggesting that California Townsendites vote in the Democratic primary. The weekly said the national movement couldn't indorse the representative's "private political ambitions."

To which McGroarty, self-styled California poet laureate, replied:

"When Dr. Townsend accuses me of political ambitions, he is talking like a fool—just like a fool. I didn't want to come to Congress and I don't want to stay. I was surprised and disgusted when the voters sent me here by a 12,000 majority."

But, despite the break with the plan's author, McGroarty is going ahead with his bill, which differs from the original Townsend scheme in that is sets $200 as the maximum monthly figure. The two per cent transactions tax provided for in the bill would raise only enough to pay every individual about $37.50 a month.

With Robert E. Clements, former OARP officer, again on the stand when the House inquiry resumed Wednesday the committee brought out the following choice bits:

1. Clements, Townsend and Walter L. Townsend, Hollywood hotel porter, had the power to dispose of all assets of OARP, and could dictate politics without any regard for what various clubs wanted.
2. Edward J. Margett, San Francisco area manager, who was paid from $1,800 to $2,000 a month, had been indicted three times in Seattle, twice for grand larceny and once for accepting the earnings of a prostitute. Clements said he wanted to discharge Margetts, who was one of their best money getters, but Townsend wouldn't agree.
3. The OARP, besides the revenue from the clubs, received about $130,000 a year from the Townsend Legion, "the knighthood of the movement." Each of the members paid $1 a month for whch they received the Townsend Weekly, a bronze button, and a membership card.
4. About 50 dinner parties were given by Townsend and Clements for members of Congress and paid for by the OARP.
5. About $1,700 collected at mass meeting in Los Angeles last February for a third party movement was not turned into the treasury.
6. Most of Townsend Weekly advertising was patent medicine ads, although Clements didn't approve of all of them.

John Bloodsworth, certified public accountant, testified Thursday that prior to July 1, 1935, the OARP accounts were incomplete and muddled, and not susceptible to a "reasonable audit." It would require $30,000 to $40,000 to get a complete accounting, he said.

The House only has $50,000 for the whole inquiry, but Representative Jasper Bell said they might ask for more. Representative Joseph Gavagan (Democrat), of New York, will be sent with a group of auditors to Pacific Coast this week to check the records of regional offices at San Francisco and Los Angeles. Hearings will be resumed in about ten days.

The House investigation disclosures made McGroarty a little doubtful about the success of his bill. Said he:

"We would certainly have had 200 Townsend Plan supporters in the next Congress if this investigation had not broken, but it looks now as if the political force of the movement is to be dissipated.

Most Congressmen, no longer harried by the fear of that huge Townsend bloc back home, agreed with him.

NRA

Its Ghost Officially Died

The ghost of the NRA died officially on Wednesday, but its shadow lingers on.

Two hundred mimeographed reports and 800 typewritten code histories were made public as the Division of Review, skeletonized form of the old National Recovery Act, expired. Leon M. Marshall, its chief, was transferred to the Commerce Department, where he will prepare still another report on NRA, to be ready by December 1, for the Cabinet Committee on Industrial Analysis, consisting of Secretaries Wallace, Roper and Perkins.

Maj. George L. Berry, aggressive labor leader, an officer of NRA since its birth in June, 1933, and always one of its most passionate advocates, was reappointed Co-ordinator of Industrial Co-operation by President Roosevelt on Monday, and given a $100,000 allotment from WPA funds. In this capacity, Mr. Berry will continue to arrange for conferences of representatives of industry, labor and consumers, and study means by which the Government can best co-operate with industry in eliminating unfair trade practices and stopping cut-throat competition.

The report of the Cabinet Committee on Industrial Analysis and Mr. Berry's findings are expected to be used by the President, if he is re-elected, as the foundation for new industrial legislation next year.

Berry

Labor in League for F. D.?

Two days after the President reappointed him as Co-ordinator of Industrial Co-operation, Maj. George L. Berry set himself up as a spokesman for U. S. labor when he announced that he is forming an organization to be known as Labor's Nonpartisan League. Workers all over the country who admire Mr. Roosevelt and support his program have asked this means of opposition, he said, to "other leagues, which had as their purpose the defeat of the President and his policies."

John L. Lewis, president of the powerful United Mine Workers, and Sidney Hillman, head of the United Garment Workers and a former NRA official, are backing the new nonpartsian league, Berry said, pointing out that before 1932 Lewis was a Republican and Hillman a Socialist.

The league will concentrate its efforts on carrying New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois for the President in November. Although the immediate object is to re-elect Roosevelt, Berry hinted that the organization might continue after 1936 as a permanent labor bloc.

Berry, who has been president of the International Pressmen's Union, an A. F. of L. affiliate, for 27 years, seemed to be angling for the federation's outright support of the President. William Green was silent, but many powerful A. F. of L. leaders announced their willingness to join the new league. The last time the federation indorsed any Presidential candidate was in 1924, when they came out for Progressive Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin.

Although Lewis and Hillman are both strong supporters of industrial unionism, Berry said his league was taking no part in in that fight, adding that about two-thirds of the people who wanted to join the organization belonged to craft unions.

In a speech at Town Hall in Washington Sunday night, Lewis challenged the A. F. of L. to hold a referendum on the question of craft vs. industrial unionism under the auspices of the Department of Labor, and said he was sure the answer would be so overwhelmingly in favor of his plan that officials of the A. F. of L. "will be compelled to make this system effective or resign their jobs."

Berry said his new organization work wouldn't interfere with his duties as co-ordinator, but industry wasn't so sure.

Justices

Rules on Anti-Trust Act

In 1927, it was smart to be slim, and one of the country's leading slogans was "When you think of a sweet, reach for a cigarette."

In 1928 15 cane sugar refining companies producing from 70 to 80 per cent of all the sugar raised in the U. S. got together to survey the damage to their trade. They formed the American Sugar Institute, Inc. and adopted a "code of ethics" to rule the industry, stop cut-throat competition, and eliminate secret concessions and price discriminations.

In 1934 the U. S. Government brought suit to dissolve the institute contending it was operating in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, that its practices, especially its requirement of adherence to openly filed prices, was an "unreasonable restraint of trade."

Judge Julian W. Mack of the New York Federal District Court refused to dissolve the institute but imposed 45 restrictions upon its activities. Last week the case came up before the Supreme Court, and the textile, plate glass and lumber industries joined in as "friends of the court" to get a liberal interpretation of the anti-trust laws, in full force since the NRA demise.

The institute's lawyer told the court:

"Because of the collapse of the Federal Government's attempt at trade regulation under the NRA, commerce and industry are looking to this court for guidance in determining what they may do to abolish destructive and dishonest trade abuses without being held guilty of violating the Federal anti-trust laws."

And the court, in upholding Judge Mack's decision in general but striking out three and mofifying one of the 45 restrictions, told them how far they could go.

Voluntary action to eliminate unfair trade practices was not in violation of the anti-trust laws, the court ruled, but monopolistic price control was.

The open filing of present and future prices and terms "in accordance with the customs of the trade" is not illegal, the high court declared, but the "requirement that there must be adherence to prices and terms openly announced in advance" is contrary to the Sherman act.

The verdict was generally considered a victory for trade associations, many of which operate under open-price agreements but leave their members free to change prices at will, the court ruled:

"The antitrust laws do not prevent the adoption of resaonable means to protect interstate commerce from destructive or injurious practices and to promote competition upon a sound basis. Voluntary action to end abuses . . . may be more effective than legal processes."

The Supreme Court, in another of its decisions announced on Monday, refused to hear a suit involving the constitutionality of the public utility holding company act of 1935. The Administration claimed it wasn't a fair case upon which to decide constitutionality because the Government wasn't involved. The case was brought by the Burco Co. against the American States Public Service Co. to force the latter to register with the SEC, and the District Court at Baltimore in its ruling had held the whole act unconstitutional.

Administration officials were delighted with the Supreme Court action, which means that a final ruling on the constitutionality of the act will not come before fall, when the Government's own case against the Electric Bond & Share Co. will come up.

Taxes

Business Spoke Its Mind

Big business had its chance to tell the House what it thought of the new $790,000,000 tax bill in public hearings before the Ways and Means Committee last week, and its disapproval was loud and prolonged.

Three representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, which has a membership of 2,600 companies employing 3,500,000 men, led the assault and many other business men and representatives of farmers' groups followed.

The present bill, which would impose a graduated tax upon the undivided profits of corporations and a "windfall" levy on agricultural processing taxes returned by the Supreme Court, was condemned by business men and economists appearing before the committee as economically unsound and politically unfair. The bill, according to business interests, would foster monopoly, raise unemployment, penalize thrift, stimulate speculation, increase bankruptcies, injure labor and undermine the capitalist system.

The hearing opened on Monday with Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as the first witness. He approved the bill in general, but warned the committee that the taxes fell short of the revenue needed to make up the deficit in the budget caused by passage of the bonus and the Supreme Court invalidation of the AAA.

He defended the aims of the Presidential tax plan, saying it meant that the upper income groups would have to provide the bulk of Government revenue and thus inequalities in the tax structure would be removed.

Mayor William N. Nair, of Pittsburgh was almost ejected from the hearing on Tuesday when, after much wise-cracking criticism of the bill and begging the committee not to "tax the shirt off our back," he insisted on interrupting Representative John W. McCormack while the latter was trying to read a statement. When Representative Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, reprimanded him, McNair shouted:

"Why all this dignity? I am the mayor of a great industrial city and I have the right to come here and make this protest."

Before a slow policeman could get from the back of the room to his chair to invite him out, McNair got up and left. In the corridor he told reporters:

"I saw in the papers this committee has been razzing witnesses, so I decided to do a little razzing myself."

Representatives of business interests and farmers' groups testified on Wednesday and Thursday. After a 12-hour session Thursday, during which the bill was denounced on all sides, ending up with Franklin Fort's calling it "essentially contrary to the capitalist system," the tired committeemen were just about to leave when Representative Doughton remembered another witness and called Max Bedacht. A short, stocky man with a black beard took the stand. And this witness was an approving one.

"The Communist Party agrees with the principles of levying a surplus tax, but we think that the House committee has left plenty of loopholes. However, it is a step in the right direction—a step toward shifting the tax burden from the shoulders of the poor to the shoulders of the rich."

Democratic leaders, embarrassed by Mr. Bedacht's congratulations, suggested to him that the Communist Party didn't want the repeal of the existing corporation and excess profits taxes. But Mr. Bedacht was not to be swayed from his approval of the President.

"I am not against this bill," he said firmly, as Republican members gleefully cheered him on.

He did suggest, however, that the House committee go farther and retain present corporation taxes in addition to the new levy and increase income and inheritance taxes.

Representative Doughton hopes to complete hearings this week and have the bill before the House for consideration in about ten days. Some time this week House leaders will confer with the President to discuss with him their modification, cutting from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 from his original proposal.

AAA

Peril to Farmers' Girls?

For two weeks Senator Arthur Vandenberg, of Michigan, Republican "white hope" in Congress, has been demanding publication of all AAA benefits over $10,000. Monday he gave Congress new evidence of large payments, showing that a New York bank had received a check for $795,486.66 for not raising sugar on a Puerto Rico plantation; and that a sugar company on the island had received $961,064.00.

Secrtary Wallace, ever since Vandenberg suggested the plan, has been telling reporters how long it would take to get the data for Congress, if that body should order it, and how costly the process would be. But Vandenberg keeps on insisting that Congress demand from Wallace the names of all farmers which the AAA has put into the high income class.

On Wednesday Mr. Wallace thought of a new objection. Reminding reporters of the suggestion last year that children of corporation executives might be kidnaped if their father's salaries were revealed, the Secretary, with a twinkle in his eye, said:

"Now, if we make the benefit payments public, somebody might come along and kidnap the farmer's daughter."

Senator Vandenberg, however, didn't think there was any danger. He said:

"If the farmer who made that $298,000 for not planting so many thousand acres in cotton has a daughter, she must be a girl without a soul. That farmer was a corporation."

Borah

Defeated by Old Guard

Senator William Edgar Borah went down to defeat before the Republican "Old Guard" in the New York primary elections Thursday, when delegates and alternatives favoring his candidacy lost to the conservatives in every one of the nine districts they contested. New York will send an unpledged delegation of 90 to the convention, controlled by the regular G. O. P. leaders. Most of the delegates are expected to vote for Gov. Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas, with Senator Vandenberg as second choice.

Borah, who left last night for Wisconsin, where he will compete in the primary on Tuesday, said that the New York results proved his contention that the party was being controlled by "big business".

Besides the Wisconsin primary, four others will be held this month—Illinois and Nebraska on April 14; Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, on April 28. The first outright test between Borah and Landon popularity among Republicans is not expected until May 19, when they meet in the New Jersey primary.

Gov. Landon picked up 18 delegates in Kentucky last week, and the Maine Republican convention ratified a slate of 13 delegates unpledged but "disposed" to Frank Knox.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg continued to be the favorite convention "second choice". There was much excitement on the political front Sunday when the New York Times declared that former President Hoover and his immediate supporters were supporting Vandenberg for the nomination. Monday, Mr. Hoover vehemently denied it.

"Not an atom of truth in that gossip," his statement said. "Mr. Hoover is solely engaged in fighting the New Deal".

Speaking at Fort Wayne, Ind., last night the former President continued his attack on the Administration, accusing it of trying to "introduce foreign creeds of regimentation, socialism and fascism into America."

Ethiopia

Hell on Wheels Swings On!

The Four Horsemen of the Tiber rode again last week on their macabre journey that leads to Armageddon.

Harrar of the Five Doors—ancient walled city of the Moslems—felt the first impact. As dawn broke last Sunday over the age-old tomb of Ras Makonnen, 37 mighty argonauts of the air, playing a grim symphony of death, dropped their lethal cargo on the deserted market town to reduce it to a blazing shambles.

Southward from Debarek and Sakota the Fascist "Hell on Wheels" swung onto the caravan trail that points the road to Gondar. At noon Tuesday a column of trucks, manned by 5,000 picked Black Shirts, clattered into that city of old palaces to arouse the growling British lion that jealousy guards nearby Lake Tsana.

And, even at that hour on the East, where a torrid parched terrain joins with French Somaliland tired and thirty Roman legions, making forced marches in the ghastly heat, entered Fort Sardo to complete the occupation of the rich Aussa Sultanate.

Back in Rome banner headlines in the controlled press screamed triumphantly:

"From today on, Ethiopia ceases to exist."

And, as if in answer to that boastful claim, the Imperial Guard at that hour was moving northward from Quoram to launch a gallant surprise attack against the Italian First Army Corps in the valley of the Mecan River.

The battle that followed—called Mai Cio after a towering crag nearby—is reported to have lasted all day Wednesday and long after Thursday's noon.

Creeping forward under cover of darkness the Ethiopians at the first break of dawn launched their sturdy offensive.

But Badoglio's Italians were prepared and wave after wave of desperate blacks that charged and reformed and charged again and again were met with an impenetrable resistance.

The Ethiopian attack had failed and now the Fascist black shirts were ordered into action.

Aided by airplanes and heavy artillery they slowly forced Selassie's crack troops backward to Lake Ashangi.

But the retreat was orderly and the rains that followed brought the situation to a temporary stalemate.

The battle, observers agree, shapes up as merely one more move in the weary chess game now being played with an ancient kingdom as the stake. The deciding conflict remains to be fought in the days that lie ahead.

There is no doubt, however, that the Negus is gravely worried over recent developments at the front. In a strongly-worded protest to the League against the gas and bombing raids, the Lion of Judah charged that Rome "has redoubled its barbarity in waging a war of aggression upon a small people."

In this note the Emperor asked for an increase in sanctions against Italy. But Ethiopia is forgotten by Geneva and any action is unlikely while war clouds still darken the troubled continent.

Austria

More Treaty Scrapping

Echoes of the Prussian jackboot had scarcely died in the cobblestone streets of the Rhineland when Austria's colorless Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg tore up the treaty of St. Germain.

A madly cheering Diet readily gave ear to his decree that all male citizens between 18 and 42 "may be called upon to serve the fatherland with, or without arms, according to their physical and spiritual capacities, for labor on public works or for the defense of the state against external or internal enemies."

In an earlier address to the pliable rubber-stamp representatives of the people, Schuschnigg asserted that Austrians "are no militarists." Influenced perhaps by the oratory of the former house painter in Berlin he declared that Austria "has been exemplary in her loyalty to treaty obligations and has made essential contributions to the pacification of central Europe, but she must clear away barriers in the way of self-preservation."

And even as Vienna put on a gala air to celebrate its newly recovered "equality" among nations, Austrian anti-Semitism, long soft-pedaled, screamed for blood sacrifice from the housetops.

In words reminiscent of Germany's Jew baiter No. 1, ruthless Streicher of the "ritualistic murders," a leading Jesuit, George Bichlmair, expounded a new-old doctrine of race hate.

"The long unexpiated crime of Golgotha is about to be purged," droned the spiritual father in the pages of the press. "It is undeniable that the German people have suffered enormous damage through the influence of Jewry. Since we are convinced this is due to the attitude of many present-day Jews, it is essential that a start be made by the proportional expulsion of Jews from influential and responsible posts."

Countless Jewish organizations have protested this violation of the constitution of 1867 and 1934, but the government is still darkly silent.

Many in agitation and deep fear recall a similar pronouncement made in Munich in those fateful days that preceded the rise of an eccentric Austrian corporal to the carte blanche omnipotence of a German deity.

Mexico

Cardenas Goes to Church

Disorders in distant Spain were duplicated in that warm, lazy land of Mexico that lies beyond the Rio Grande.

At a Guanajuato school demonstration last Monday teachers clashed with Catholic opponents of the Government's Socialist education plan and 16 participants were slain.

To Ciudad Gonzalez to investigate flew President Cardenas, firm-jawed and turbulent. Excited in that town saw him stalk through the portals of their church. They followed in amazement. Later old-timers would recall that it had been many years since a President of Mexico had crossed a papal threshold. They would hear him lash out at dissenters from the high altar of their shrine:

"It has been said that these places (churches) have been erected to propagate truth, which is in contrast with the work of lies and provocation that emanated from this very spot yesterday. But I come to tell the truth . . . We do not excite the popular masses. If we give the agrarian elements arms, it is that they may defend the patrimony that the revolution is giving them."

Despite the growing bitterness, however, between the church and state thousands of Catholic churches throughout Mexico were reopened. This development followed a statement of policy made by the government of Cardenas indicating that a liberal attitude would be adopted and that no official attempt would be made to prevent churches from being used for worship if the religious laws were observed.

Foreign Affairs

Eden

No Treaty Scrapping!

"I am not prepared to be the first Foreign Secretary to go back on a British signature."

Tall, lean, elegant Anthony Eden told the British Parliament last week—which was half-fearful that Great Britain had gone too far in guaranteeing France against Nazi invasion—that he intended that his country should observe its obligations under the Locarno Pact in the pressing Rhineland crisis.

A few minutes after Germany's von Ribbentrop had presented him with the brilliant propagandist epistle from his master and war-lord, the handsome Eden strode with decision across Downing street to attend a meeting of the Cabinet.

The first decision to be reached was that conversations among the general staffs of Britain, France and Belgium should be begun without delay, the agenda to be drawn up in advance by the political governments and that the staff talks should be held later in London, if possible.

The other decision was to dispatch immediate letters of guarantee to the French and Belgium governments, providing not only consulation in the event of a breakdown with Germany, but also that Britain and Italy "will immediately come to the assistance of your government in accordance with the Treaty of Locarno."

France, however, was irate. Angered by what they termed the "negative character" of Der Feuhrer's counter-proposals for a European peace structure the Quai d'Orsay demanded that a new meeting of the Locarno powers, other than Germany, be summoned to meet in Brussels. Hitler, they said, was trying to dictate to Europe in the same manner that he orders about his robot-like German people.

Demanding specific definition of Adolf Hitler's hitherto "vague proposals," bald hulking Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin lashed the plebiscite speeches of Der Fuehrer and declared that France is ready to negotiate with Germany "if respect for international law is first re-established."

But observers agree that there is much more behind the French objections. Ever since the advent of the former Austrian corporal to power France has sought an Eastern Locarno pact to safeguard the security of Eastern Europe.

Failing to achieve this the Quai d'Orsay turned to Soviet Russia and last week the mutual assistance pact between the Red Army and France was consummated.

Virtually directed at Germany, the treaty provides that the soldiers of the crimson star will come to the aid of La Belle France if it is attacked by any European power.

But Hitler in his memorandum last week ignored any mention of this military alliance, thus intensifying France's dilemma. For, if France wishes to abide by the specifications laid down by Germany, she must ignore the Russian attitude that there can be no feeling of security in Eastern Europe until the Reichmaster agrees to a non-aggression pact with the U. S. S. R.

The Fascisti alone of all the Locarno powers were elated. For some time they have sought to separate the League Covenant from the Treaty of Versailles and Germany's demand for the return of her lost colonies found a natural sympathy in a land that is still engaged in bloody conflict for new territories in East Africa.

Iran

Shah Hates Wise Cracks

His Imperial Majesty, the Shah of Iran, is brooding darkly on his famous Peacock throne while his subjects scurry in all directions before his gathering anger.

The Shah, who was once known to the Persian Cossacks as Riza Pahlavi, a fair enough stable boy, has been irked unduly it appears by the wise-cracking scribes of this country.

It all started, or ended, last November, you may remember, when two cops at Elkton, Md., halted the speeding car of Ghaffar Djalal, the Shah's diplomatic gift to America.

When the blustering Minister claimed immunity of office with many wise saws and sayings, the flatfeet unceremoniously put him in irons and threw him in the hoosegow.

What followed is now history, or rather material for some gifted ballad writer. The envoy was released after red-faced representations to the State Department, and profound apologies were given in the grand manner by the local authorities, Gov. Nice and soft-spoken Cordell Hull. In addition the meddlesome cops were swiftly given the gate.

But the Shah's pride was unappeased. The American press had offended his royal ear with its nasty comments and further atonement was demanded.

In vain Secretary Hull pointed out that the press has at all times been unmanageable and that writers usually say what they think. But since freedom of expression in Iran is limited to His Imperial Highness in Teheran such a reply was received with a very incredulous snort.

Hurt by the cold shoulder he got, the former stable boy curtly recalled Djalal, leaving a shy charge d'affaires, one Hossein Ghods, in the rooting section for Iran.

Few people, however, had heard of Mr. Ghods. He had no small horror of society and always shunned the bright lights. Recently when he sent out notices for a big reception diplomats queried each other in startled wonderment.

The upshot of the matter was that Hossein received a flurry of "sincere regrets" and, ill with grief or anger, the house-warming was indefinitely postponed.

For the second time a Shah's representative had been flouted and Teheran was enraged.

Last week the peacock throne shook with royal bile and wires hummed his latest challenge to America.

Some gadfly wits say that the move was in the interests of economy and that the Shah had long contemplated laying aside a bigger nest egg for his old age.

Whatever the reason may have been capital diplomats are indulging in loud guffaws at his action.

Back in Teheran, however, they are making detours around the palace and the courtiers tip-toe through the silent splendor of the halls.

Germans

Ja, Hitler Ist der Mann!

"Germany wants peace. There can be no real world peace without equality between partners. There can no longer be honored and dishonored."

Teutons who listened in the pouring rain last Sunday saw a slight, slim man, high in the dusty rafters of one of the greatest gun factories in the world, under the blinding searchlights of gigantic lamps, in tones of the utmost defiance, declare a lasting peace upon the earth.

Across the platform that enclosed him, shrieking banners emblazoned the words: "Europe stands or falls with Hitler."

And even at that hour a conquered people poured obediently to the polls.

Vote! screamed the radio, the press, the Hitler Youth, the Storm Troopers, and every loud brass band in the Reich.

Vote "Ja," for "No" means denunciation, concentration.

And so amid shouting and singing, and blowing of bugles, and fervid pounding of drums, the halt, the lame and the blind walked or were carried to the polling booths—one mob, one mass, one voice, conforming to the eccentric whims of an ex-housepainter.

The result was a foregone conclusion. Patriotism and propaganda combined to bring it about, and the rest was accomplished by the technicality of the ballot. Hitler emerged from the plebiscite, we are told by his election officials, with 98.79 per cent of the votes. Locarno was truly dead and an anxious Europe was tense.

Three days later Der Fuehrer submitted his proposals to the waiting Locarno powers.

To Britain's Eden in distant London flew one-time champagne salesman, Von Ribbentrop, with the leader's new peace plan.

Opening with an expression of regret that the Locarno powers' memorandum of March 20 did not provide "a serviceable and fruitful basis" for a new treaty, he made it clear that Germany would continue negotiations for European security pacts only when "a spirit of understanding of the laws of honor and equality of status" are respected.

To "shorten the period of uncertainty," the Nazi leader proposed a four-month limit in which to effect nonaggression pacts.

During this period of negotiation the German government promised that it would not undertake any reinforcement whatsoever to troops in the Rhineland "provided that the Belgian and French governments act similarly."

To guarantee this, Hitler proposed to set up a commission composed of representatives of the two guarantor powers, England and Italy, and of a disinterested neutral nation.

Then the Nazi bandmaster suggested in the lofty manner of Woodrow Wilson:

1. A 25-year nonaggression pact between Belgium and France on one side and Germany on the other, Britain and Italy signing as guarantor powers.
2. The conclusion of an air pact for western Europe to strengthen the security agreement.
3. Negotiations with nations on Germany's southeastern and northeastern boundaries to conclude nonaggression pacts.

Either at once or after the conclusion of these agreements Germany expressed her willingness to re-enter the debating circle at Geneva.

But the German peace exponent had yet another ace in the hole. For in his avowal of "complete reciprocity" he voiced the expectancy of the German nation that "within a reasonable time . . . the question of colonial equality, as well as the question of separating the League covenant from its Versailles treaty basis must be satisfactorily settled."

Mongolia

Empires at the Crossroads

On a high plateau in the far-flung East two lines of empire meet, and last week with plenty of troops at hand itching for conquest or for glory, they clashed in a sullen two-day struggle that roared around the world.

The bone of contention is that wild tract of country—Outer Mongolia—where cattle breeders of late years have been stumbling hastily along a strange new path that leads from fourteenth century feudalism to twentieth century communism.

Despite recent diplomatic overtures Soviet-Japanese tension had crystalized in loud protests over continuing border incidents, both sides charging aggression along the ill-defined frontiers.

Through its puppet state, Manchukuo, Japan sternly protested for the third time in four days. A squadron of 12 Mongol planes, Hsinking alleged, swooped down on a Japanese patrol "about 20 kilometers north of Tawlan" and raked it with machine gun fire.

As a reprisal Japanese and Manchukuoan troops aided by heavy artillery and airplanes pushed 30 miles into Outer Mongolia engaging a patrol near Adykdolon.

For two days, according to Soviet-censored reports from Ulan Bator, a pitched battle was grimly fought until finally the invading hordes broke and fled in wild disorder.

And even as the smoke still lingered over the blood-spattered plain the capitals of the two empires were feverishly issuing communiques.

Suave, bald-pated Gen. Uyeda, Nippon's commander in Manchukuo, termed developments "a serious menace to the peace of the Far East."

Thundered Moscow in reply through its vice commissar for foreign affairs, B. S. Stomaniakoff, "the situation does not permit waiting pacifically for development of events."

Refraining from directly accusing the Japanese government of instigating the hostilities, Stomaniakoff called attention to the fact that the Soviet Union, with its vast army of more than 1,000,000 men, had pledged its aid to Outer Mongolia in the event that autonomous republic should ever become a victim of aggression.

Two empires have met at the crossroads, two empires menacingly clashed with their pawns. The world breathlessly awaits the inevitable charge of the knights.

Mannequin

The Miss Was From Paree

A lean, supple lass, with curves where they ought to be, slipped into a jaded Gotham one day last week and took the wiseacres for a merry ride.

Ruby Halliday, henna-haired emigree from these shores a good many years, is back among the natives, and to hear her talk, she doesn't like it much.

Memphis-born, the Southern lass who spent four profitable years abroad as the leading mannequin for the late Jean Patou, eased her sleeky slimness into a hotel lounge chair and prattled critically in a Continental accent.

"I have been here a month," the debonair boulevardier declared, "and I haven't seen an original costume design yet. New York women wear stunning copies of French clothes, and they are very fresh and gay, using little make-up. But their clothes are skimpy in material, and that does not make for a good dress."

Critic Halliday gave the working girls a break when she remarked that even the shop-girls were so well-dressed she couldn't tell them from Park avenue.

"I guess this is an expression of your democracy," she blithely added. "In Europe the distinction is marked. If you see a well-dressed woman you can mark her as a lady of fashion. Here Sadie Doaks can vie with Gwendolyn de Park."

The American male, however, is low in the estimation of the glamorous honey from Paree.

"They lack the manners and gallantry of Parisian gentlemen," she said. "Why, the other night, I was in a night club and a man came over to my table and said: 'Hya, baby. How about a little drinkie?'"

You really would never suspect that Miss Halliday was Southern born. Her accent, like her dress, is sleeky and sophisticated. Soon she will return to strut her stuff before the bored and weary crowds that surge outside the Moulin Rouge.

Nudists

Steno Writes Bare Facts

Under the shade of a moss-covered oak tree on the shore of Lake Thonotossa in sunny Florida a full-fledged nudist stenographer pounds the keys today with a naked zest.

She is Helen Hardy, a slender winsome 25-year-old brunette, who was picked out of an application list of 59 by the director of the nudist group there, who had earlier importuned the Federal Re-employment Service at Tampa, for aid in his frantic quest.

With nature's raiment as her office dress, Miss Hardy will nonchantly sit at her typewriter, mounted on a table under a kindly Southern sun, and take dictation from the gayly gamboling sprites who magniloquently call themselves the American Gymnosophical Society.

As qualifications for the post, Helena boasted five years of interest in nudism, practical experience in a nudist colony in Miami and a nursing record, as well as her ability as a stenographer.

In addition to her duties as correspondent she will serve as quartermaster for the group. For the colony members who in daily life have no pockets in which to carry momentoes of their dark and clothed past, Helen will have a special drawer at her desk to cater to their whimsical needs.

Gloria

Her Mother Lost Her Again

The nine old men who brought so many headaches to the starry-eyed protagonists of the New Deal last week killed socialite Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt's last hope to win back her heiress daughter.

Lumped with a mass of other litigation ruled upon at the end of the day's session of court, was a brief item in 12 terse words.

"775—Vanderbilt vs. Whitney et al."

"In this case the petition for a writ of certiorari is denied."

In layman's language it meant that the black-robed justices had refused to interfere with the decision of New York's Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew—approved by the State's appeal courts—which gave 12-year-old little Gloria to her aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

It also meant that that last chamber of appeal turned a deaf ear to Mrs. Vanderbilt's denial of stories by witnesses who took the stand in New York and villified her name to support Mrs. Whitney's charge that she was an unfit guardian for her daughter.

So ends one of the bitterest of family feuds to be aired in the courts in recent years.

But Mrs. Vanderbilt, from Cleveland, voiced her determination to "go on fighting."

"I am going to get my child back if it kills me," she said, when apprised of the ultimate defeat. "No, this doesn't turn me against America. I'm going to remain here and fight it out."

Nine old men have thought otherwise with 12 cold written words though no echo came from the bench where they frigidly sat.

Crime

Bruno

The Kidnaper Died

Bruno Richard Hauptmann is dead.

The former German machine gunner who had flirted with death for four long years in a Flanders hell, atoned with his life Friday night for a crime that shocked the world.

All last week through a complex labyrinth of law interpretation that vied with the bizarre events that attended his trial, the Bronx carpenter was shuffled hither and yon in a political chess game with death.

On Monday the Court of Pardons met and rejected his second plea for mercy after five hours of wearisome discussion.

Twenty minutes later the Governor announced with tight-lipped finality—"There will be no reprieve."

Tuesday night Bruno's head was shaved in conformity with regulations and he prepared to walk "the last mile" to his death.

The hour for execution approached. Minutes passed heavy-lidded into hours in this Gethsemene before his Golgotha.

Then as the hands of the clock stood at 8 p. m. Principal Keeper Mark O. Kimberling announced that the execution would be delayed at least 48 hours. This decision was made after a last-minute telephone conversation with Allyne Freeman, foreman of a "runaway" Mercer County Grand Jury that met the same day to investigate the Wendel angle of the story.

Wendel had been arrested and had signed a "confession" which he later repudiated. He charged that he had been kidnaped and tortured by sleuths employed by Ellis Parker, sr., the famed Burlington County detective.

Paul Wendel, a disbarred Trenton attorney, was, it is said, believed by Parker to be the man who telephoned him shortly after the kidnaping—and before the baby's body was found—offering to return the child if guaranteed immunity.

On Wednesday as a dizzy world waited, a second announcement was made by Kimberling that the execution of the carpenter would take place on Friday, but that it would be deferred if another stay was granted. About this time Clarence Darrow, from Chicago, wired an appeal for Hauptmann.

The Mercer grand jury adjourned Thursday after voting to discontinue its investigations and failing to return any indictments. On the same day prominent faculty members of Princeton University addressing themselves to the New Jersey Legislature petitioned them to determine if any public officials connected with the case were open to prosecution.

Early Friday, Prosecutor Wilentz put the case squarely up to Hoffman, at the same time reminding him that he had no legal right to grant another reprieve.

Hoffman capitulated and at 7:30 p. m.—½-hour before the final curtain in the drama was rung down—he intimated that he had given up his long fight to save the condemned Bruno from the chair.

With every legal loophole plugged Hauptmann was led on his last walk to the execution chamber.

Witnesses who hoped for a confession were doomed to disappointment. Face an ashen-grey and eyes like sucked wells, Hauptmann, nevertheless, died as he had lived—inscruitably silent to the end.

ELLIS PARKER—Detective who caused Wendel's arrest is investigated.

Vera

The Jury Acquitted Her

Swaying with a nervous rhythm in the witness chair, her voice now rising to a scream, now trailing off into an echo of moans and incoherent babblings, the ash-blonde slayer with the art's degree, Vera (Shot-a-Man) Stretz sobbed out the story of her dying love to a crowded ringside in New York last week.

While General Sessions Judge Cornelius F. Collins, unmoved by the plethora of her tears, thundered commands for her to end her disturbing hysteria, the unheeding Vera shrieked that she had shot her Nazi lover, Dr. Fritz Gebhart, in order to prevent an unnatural assault.

Time and time again Judge Collins scored her dramatics. On one occasion when her counsel, Samuel Leibowitz, lowered his voice to the proper blush when reading a naughty passage from "Lady Chatterly's Lover," the angered jurist shouted in answer to a request to have the courtroom cleared.

"I won't. It's too theatrical. This will be conducted like any other murder trial. If there are any women who feel they will be shocked they can leave now."

Her eyes closed and her head flung back in the proper spirit of the strutting player, Vera with moist handkerchief to tear-stained face, told the court that she was still in love with the economist who had enmeshed her.

"When a women loves a man so wholeheartedly, it is not crushed in a moment."—this in a flood of words, face pale and strangely contorted.

Tuesday the prosecution conducted by Miles M. O'Brien raked Miss Stretz with a relentless cross-examination but the latter clung to the major points in her story.

Despite this, however, an admission was wrung from her that she did not scream when attacked, and that, although she said she wanted to get rid of him because he had not divorced his wife, she had spent much time in his company in the 48 hours prior to the slaying.

As the case approached its climax Judge Collins slowly and dispassionately reviewed the testimony.

Scoffing at the defence implication that the Nazi believed in the half-wit philosophy of the superman, the jurist said:

"There was nothing 'super' at all in the way they made love. I don't see why they should blame that on poor Nietzsche—he died in 1900."

The case of the ash-blonde should rest, he concluded, upon the question of whether it had become necessary to kill her lover in order to escape "a vile, unnatural attack."

"If you believe the girl's story acquit her," he said.

The jury did believe her. After deliberating 3 hours and 7 minutes the jury entered the courtroom at 8:17 p. m. on Friday (just as Hauptmann in far-away Trenton sat in the shadow of the electric chair) and returned a verdict of "Not guilty."

The former mistress of Gebhardt collapsed. Bending over her a court attendent shouted: "Didn't I tell you to keep your chin up?"

Disasters

Tornado

Horror in the South

In the wake of the ravaging floods that recently brought wild-eyed terror to the Eastern Seaboard, a ripping, roaring, twister swept with a wild weird song of death through five Southern States last Thursday.

As a frightened dawn broke through the horror of a howling night, five Southern States stole out to count their dead and dying. At least 35 perished, more than 500 were injured, thousands were rendered homeless, and property damage climbed in the millions.

Smashing out of the Southwest corner of Georgia the tornadic winds zig-zagged crazily to the Northeast, and, picking up speed, lashed with erratic blind-mad rage across the fertile tobacco country of the Carolinas.

Westward at that hour a lightning-swift gale was raking Alabama, levelling homes in the glee of its grim game.

Gallery Glimpses

By Robert C. Albright

A SUSPICION that President Roosevelt still has one or two legislative proposals he has not yet confided to Congress is growing in the minds of restless Democratic and Republican members.

Recent reticence about fixing even a tentative adjournment date can be attributed more to this doubt than to the uncertain time of tax and relief bill passage.

They have seen legislative slates cleared before and then suddenly jammed up at the last minute by new legislation of a "must" character.

Leaders will discuss readily minor and major bills now on the calendar and their chances for passage, but you will not find a one who will say flatly that the Administration has laid its last recommendation into the hopper.

Forecasts on adjournment are growing more and more nebulous. The last official prediction was May 1, but even those who made it now admit it is probably weeks out of kelter.

As convention time nears, Democratic members are growing a bit jittery over the thing. There are a good many political fences in a bad state of repair, and some could well use the time between now and November putting a post in here and there.

It is uncertainly over what the President might have in mind that galls most—the knowledge that they have not been taken completely into his confidence—and the fear they may say a lot of things they may have to swallow later.

One reason for prevailing unhappiness over the situation—and harbinger possibly of other things to come—was the President's recent letter to some committee chairmen, warning that unless appropriations are held down, he may need new taxes. One tax bill on election eve is considered bad political medicine. Two, most members think, would be suicide.

Chairman James P. Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, thinks there might have been some mistake about addressing one copy of that letter to him. He contends if there had been any sinning, it has been on the Senate side, while his committee has hewn to the line of budget estimates. He is thinking about writing a letter to the President telling him so.

THE House Ways and Means Committee is rather proud of its tax report, and is out to protect it against all comers. Which explains why witnesses appearing in opposition to the new corporation taxes last week found themselves placed unexpectedly on the defensive.

After one particularly heavy shower of damaging questions, and seemingly innocent left-hooks, into which he walked unsuspecting, one witness grew wary of all cross-examination. He was certain of only one thing, and that was—he had no Democratic friends on the committee.

He was in this state of mind when Representative Arthur P. Lamneck, of Ohio, the one Democrat on the committee who is violently opposed to the tax program, walked into the room and started firing questions.

The witness was cagey. To him, this was just another hostile member who was out to force an injurious admission. Warily, he dodged and sidestepped all of the questions, even leading ones plainly favorable to his cause. Perhaps this was just another effort to trick him?

Nearly exasperated, Lamneck naively told him in so many words that he was a "friend." Even then the witness wasn't certain. In desperation, Lamneck made a stump speech against the subcommittee's tax report.

The witness was convinced at last.

"Now," he said, "I know you are a friend."

Out of the recent traffic dilemma over immunity from arrest of members of Congress, has evolved at least one constructive suggestion from Capitol Hill. One member proposes a phonographic horn in place of Congressional license plates. The driver would press a button and the horn would shriek: "Will the gentleman yield?" All patent rights reserved.

SUPREME Court justices consented tacitly to being herded into the new Supreme Court Building, and its modernly accoutered courtroom, but there is one modern improvement they will not put up with.

Some registered vehement protests when it was proposed to place individual amplifiers in front of each desk.

Acoustics were bad, admittedly, but other ways would have to be found to improve them.

In the course of a long hearing, the justices engage in whispered asides to one another, little pleasantries perhaps, or, at times, confidential comments on testimony. At all events, it wouldn't do to have them broadcast to the entire courtroom.

Acoustics engineers arrived at another solution—the well-known device of spreading cloth beneath the ceiling. It works fairly well. And the judges' confidences are still confidential.

Report has it the Republican National Committee is thinking about supplementing its growing corps of publicity and research assistants with a staff artist or two, who would graphically illustrate the fact and figures dished out to them for public consumption. The New Deal has an illustrated publication that does the same thing.

The New Rector Of C. U.

It is still true, as Walter Bagehot said, that "a schoolmaster should walk wonderingly." But there is plenty of room for disagreement with Cowper's opinion that "a teacher should be sparing of his smile." The modern instructor must be more than a martinet and should have qualities going beyond proficiency in his academic subject. As for the head of a university, he must be, veritably, a multiple man. A knowledge of the humanities, combined with an understanding of youth, is no longer sufficient. He needs an interest in the specialities of the professional schools; he needs the social spirit, and he needs that quality rare among scholars: executive business ability.

When a university head possessed of these requirements has gone to other duties in another field, the task of replacing him is difficult and delicate. Yet a wise choice seems to have been made in the selection of a successor to Bishop James Hugh Ryan as rector of Catholic University.

The formal education of Mgr. Joseph M. Corrigan, the new appointee, speaks for his wide culture. His popularity among the junior laymen of his faith proves congeniality with the young. The variety of his previous positions, all honorably held, indicates the versatility of his talents. He has a reputation for social ease, and, as an executive, his abilities are attested by his record as head of St. Charles Seminary, as chancellor of the Roman Catholic diocese of Philadelphia and as director of its charities.

Catholic University is to be congratulated for its success in finding so promising a successor to Dr. Ryan.

Down To The Root Problem.

Washington's tale of neglected health and premature death has now been officially told for the fifth time since preparation of the 1937 budget began. With the latest repetition, before the Senate sub-committee on District Appropriations, the prospect of obtaining funds to ameliorate this disgraceful condition has greatly improved. Still there is no assurance that the Capital City will be permitted to make a frontal attack upon its abnormal death rate.

The story of overcrowded hospitals, inadequate nursing service, lax precautions against social diseases and preventable contagion among school children was first told to the District Commissioners by public health officials and informed civic groups. Knowing the terrible conditions, the city fathers readily agreed that additional funds for public health are imperative. In any other city the fight against a community menace would have ended there. Funds would have been appropriated, and health authorities would have set to work immediately to wipe out this dangerous municipal humiliation.

In Washington, however, approval of a policy by the local authorities is only a first step toward its final acceptance or rejection. The Commissioners had to carry their petition to the Budget Bureau, a Federal agency which can not be expected to give much thought to the District's local problems. Its response was not sympathetic. Along with other items, the slashed health budget then went to the House, where Representative Blanton refused to permit "damned doctors" to present their testimony. Whatever the House learned of these deplorable conditions came chiefly from the reverberations of a public meeting at Central High School.

More recently the District's plea for decent standards of public health has been again presented to the Budget Bureau. In every case since the budget left the District Building, however, hearings have been secret. Denied full information as to the testimony presented, the public has been at a serious disadvantage in pressing its case. When this handicap is placed alongside the four extraordinary hurdles which a District appropriation must clear—the Budget Bureau, the House, the Senate, and the Conference Committee—the present method of dealing with urgent local problems is seen to be well-nigh intolerable.

The relatively simple issue of permitting the District to spend its own funds to conserve the health of its own residents now rests entirely in the hands of Congress. There is not much more local groups can do to correct the deficiencies of the 1937 budget.

Regardless of what the outcome may be, the experience of civic leaders to date has proved the impossibility of permanently securing adequate funds for health, as well as education, police protection, and other essential civic services, without a change in the present system. With specific problems temporarily disposed of, the committee which has conducted this courageous and dignified campaign for public health cannot too soon begin its proposed fight for intelligent revision of the District's obsolete machinery of fiscal control.

Capital Punishment.

It is inevitable, and it is also desirable, that the Hauptmann execution should again bring to the fore the difficult issue of capital punishment. Civilization has reached no final conclusion on this problem, so arguments pro and con are always in order. And they become particularly timely because of the report that the last words of this particular victim of the system contained a plea for the abolition of the death sentence in convictions obtained by circumstantial evidence.

The distinction there raised illustrates the first difficulty in forming an objective judgment on the subject. For there is no clear line of demarcation between direct and circumstantial evidence of guilt. In the case of Hauptmann himself the possession of the ransom money, never explained in any convincing manner, was alone proof positive of at least complicity in the crime. It is clearly stretching the facts to say that this conviction was obtained by circumstantial evidence.

As to the death penalty as an institution, regardless of the character of the evidence leading to its imposition, human reasoning is often even more cloudy. Nobody, for instance, took exception to the killing of Dillinger, without even the benefit of a trial, when he drew his gun against the Federal agents who had surrounded him. Reflection will show that the sentiment against the execution of Hauptmann gained in direct relation to the effort exerted to give him every opportunity to prove an innocence he could not demonstrate. Indeed it is obvious that Hauptmann would have had far fewer sympathizers today if he had been ruthlessly shot down when first caught red-handed with the secreted ransom money, over 18 months ago. Perhaps it is not the fact of punishment, but the ideas of slow, inexorable retribution which we dislike.

Few opponents of capital punishment dare to say flatly that society has any duty to safeguard the life of a man who would commit a crime like the Lindbergh kidnaping. Few proponents of the death penalty, on the other hand, can argue convincingly that it has proved an effective deterrent to ruthless major crime. So we have a practice which paradoxically appears both essential as a protection and inefficient as a safeguard of social order. In this respect it is something like the institution of warfare, which takes tens of thousands of lives for every one exacted by the law. Yet there is the difference that we know we can solve the lesser of the two problems, though whether wisely or not is far less certain.

Often the law is blamed for unnecessary delays, and certainly in this case Gov. Hoffman owes the Nation convincing explanation as to why he dragged out the ordeal so unnecessarily. And often the newspapers are blamed for giving so much space to crime and criminals, though so long as they purport to be newspapers it is difficult to see why such an important aspect of our times should be soft-pedaled. But the law might be impeccable and the press decorous beyond reproach without getting us any nearer to solution of the capital punishment issue.

If this problem is to be solved it will require at least two parallel lines of approach: complete divorce from emotionalism in public consideration; and far more comprehensive and searching evidence from trained penologists and psychologists than our legislators have as yet available. It is clearly desirable that the campaign against capital punishment should grow to the extent that it is based on logic, knowledge and informed conviction. But it is at least equally obvious that those who know the criminal world, not those who are sheltered from it, should have the casting vote in deciding when this heritage and symbol of human barbarity may safely be left behind.

As A Man Thinketh.

When a bolt of lightning shocked Miss Adeline Slover, bedridden for 15 years at her home in Keyport, N. J., she arose and walked. "It was a miracle from heaven," she told astonished friends. "I was frightened and said the Lord's Prayer."

Both her ailment and her cure were undoubtedly equally real, and both were probably entirely mental in nature. One does not have to travel to India to note the lengths to which mind can subjugate matter. Any person of ordinary mentality can put any part of his body out of commission by self-hypnosis, and it is just as true that "cures" of imaginary or even real ailments can be effected the same way.

The world today has advanced somewhat from that kind of religious fanaticism wherein men babbled in unknown tongues and injured themselves in emotional frenzy. But religion, which is so largely a matter of faith, is responsible for more "miracle cures" than pills. Physicians sometimes prescribe placebos, or "medicines" made of harmless substance without any therapeutic value, trusting to the patients' mental processes to speed recovery, if reversed mental processes are largely responsible for the trouble.

The mind's power to produce and also to cure many forms of nervous disorder is too well known to require substantiation. "As a man thinketh, so is he," concisely stated the Galilean carpenter, long before the dawn of medical science.

Bumbling, Not Bolshevik.

Outside official circles the Administration's tax program has met with a rather chilly reception. But at least a Communist spokesman has appeared before the Ways and Means Committee who says that his party approves of the plan in principle, although believing that too many loopholes have been left open for escape by the slippery capitalists.

Confronted with this testimony, the Democratic members of the committee doubtless experienced sensations akin to those of Senator Borah when he learned that he is Dr. Townsend's choice for President. However, there is comfort in the evidence that some members of the National Association of Manufacturers regard the proposed tax on corporate surpluses as a scheme for propagating monopolies and favoring big corporations at the expense of smaller competitors. Then for good measure, former Representative Franklin Fort gives color to Comrade Bedacht's testimony by denouncing the tax plan as a "direct attack on capitalism."

Between these extravagant charges and counter-charges, the ostensible purpose of the tax—the raising of new revenue—is completely lost to sight. That is the natural consequence of a blundering effort to combine tax reform with taxation for revenue. The net result is likely to be another serious disturbance to business, with negligible additions to governmental receipts.

It is, of course, nonsense to talk as if the tax plan would effect a revolutionary overthrow of our economic system. It is merely a fumbling attempt to force the distribution of surpluses that would otherwise be retained for use by corporate managements. Under some circumstances, a more liberal distribution of earnings might well be socially desirable. However, a hastily devised, punitive tax law is a dangerous weapon to employ for such a purpose, since it is impossible to allow for the widely differing conditions prevailing from industry to industry, and from concern to concern.

The capitalist system is not directly endangered by the forced dissipation of corporate surpluses, although the income of thousands of stockholders would thereby be made larger in good years and smaller in bad ones. Large corporations would not be destroyed by ultra-liberal dividend policies, but they would become much more dependent upon the outside capital market to supply them with funds for expansion. In normal times such dependence is not a handicap; indeed, from the point of view of the community, it is often an advantage.

In the United States, however, corporate surpluses have been an invaluable stabilizer of business, providing funds to keep plants running and workers employed during years when business has been operated at a loss or with little profit. Forced dispersion of these "backlog" corporate surpluses would do more harm to the working classes than to a limited number of rich stockholders, forced to pay heavy surtaxes on extra large dividends. Probably this is why the bill has Communist support, on the theory that what contributes to unemployment also assists revolutionary activities.

The substance of the matter is that the Administration's tax program is deserving of criticism because it is thoroughly empirical. Nobody knows just what readjustments would be made necessary by its adoption or how much revenue would be obtained. It is just one more annoying obstacle to recovery, to be condemned as such, and not to be given exaggerated importance as a scheme for the redistribution of wealth.

The editorial, "Bumbling, Not Bolshevik," is reprinted from yesterday's early editions.

The Administration seems to incline to the opinion that there's something rotten if a corporation keeps a nest egg too long.

Over $1,000,000 of counterfeit money was seized by G-men last year.—Life. How much is $1,000,000 worth of counterfeit money?

Taxing For The Bonus.

From the Hartford Courant.

A year ago in his message accompanying the veto of the bonus bill the President said, "The complete failure of the Congress to provide additional taxes for an additional expenditure of this magnitude would in itself and by itself warrant disapproval of this measure." The bill passed over his veto last month likewise provided no additional taxes to meet the additional expenditure called for, and the question now arises whether or not such taxes should be included in the revenue measure shortly to be laid before the House of Representatives.

The Congressional habit of appropriating money without providing the means of raising it is one that should be corrected speedily if borrowing is not to exceed all reasonable bounds. Furthermore, the growing belief on the part of the public that the money spent by the Government comes out of thin air rather than out of its own pockets is one of which it should be disabused. The President has not undertaken to advise Congress how it should raise the money needed to pay the bonus. He only has insisted that it raise it somehow, and his position deserves wide backing. Even if the Democrats do not, the Republicans, who are making much of the need for a balanced budget, should support him to the limit in this matter.

Legend And The Ledger

As an interesting souvenir of this occasion, worthy of preservation, the Inquirer presents with each copy of today's issue a facsimile of the first issue of the Public Ledger. In this journalistic link with the past wil be found reminders of the humble beginnings of local institutions that have since grown great and the names of individuals whose descendants have contributed substantially to Philadelphia's progress. (From the Philadelphia Inquirer, March 25, 1936.)

The formal wall paper, the tea table set with Queensware china, the crackle of the fire in the grate, and the rain at the windows lent an air of coziness to the high-ceilinged room. Presently the callers would arrive with the latest delectable tidbits of gossip.

Life was good, if a trifle dull. Philadelphia, at the time she married, had seemed a vastly exciting place. But now it had apparently settled down, like a sleepy-eyed hen, and let its sister cities take the lead. Washington, that beautiful city on the Potomac, was a beehive of activity. If it did not take so many days to get there by coach, she might attempt it one of these fine spring week-ends.

To her it was a dream city—the Capitol building, the President's home, the fine balls given every night, the incredibility of a city meticulously planned. Of course, Mr. Penn had hoped to fashion Philadelphia with great wide streets and leafy trees lending shade to all the avenues, but it had not worked out so. Ah well, it was home to her . . . someone was knocking at the door.

The cocktail lounge was crowded and Boots thought she had never seen so many tipsy, middle-aged men in her life. "Convention," the waiter told her.

She adjusted the tiny hat over one eye, looked at herself for the ninth time in the thimble-sized compact, then lit a cigarette. Why must she always be ahead of the crowd? There was something not quite chic in her promptness to appointments; Ted was always teasing her about it.

Maybe it was a hangover from her select-school-for-young-ladies days. You didn't get over eating and sleeping and playing by a bell overnight, even if you were a young matron of a whole year's married status.

She glanced through the pages of the paper which had been left lying on her table. From it she extracted a small edition entitled "Public Ledger" and dated Friday morning, March 25, 1836.

The ashes from her cigarette fell on its pages as she bent her head to read the fine print.

"Do come in, ladies, and arrange yourselves comfortably. The tea will be ready in a few moments. I am so anxious for you to try it because it is from a new shipment which just landed this week. My dear husband was saying that soon Philadelphia would be as good a port as New York, London and Liverpool, but you know he is very progressive. I am always laughing at him and telling him that he is entirely too advanced for these times. I should like so much to go down to the wharf and see some vessels come in—I do love masts, they are so picturesque—but my dear husband says the wharf is no place for a lady."

The mink-tippeted figure in brown velvet tossed her curls. "Your husband, I take it, my dear, is not so progressive where his wife is concerned."

The other tea drinkers drew their chairs closer. No tea party was worth the name that did not brew a tempest as well as tea.

But they were disappointed. Their hostess laughed and lent the other cheek. "My husband is ever mindful of what that dreadful Mrs. Trollope said of American women some four years ago. He seems determined that I shall make up in good taste what that English lady termed a shocking lack of it when she visited our shores. But let us not discuss customs; rather costumes. I have just been scanning some rather fetching advertisements for thread lacings which I found in a new paper called the Public Ledger."

• • • •

"Hello, hello, everybody. Hurry up and settle down. I can hardly wait to show you this adorable paper that I just found in the Inquirer. Seems it's the hundredth aniversary of the Ledger or something, which later was merged with the Inquirer. But my dears, it's too, too quaint."

"Quaint or no quaint, Boots, we want to order. How many will it take for us to catch up?"

"I give you my word, I haven't even had a single sip. I've been reading this too, too divine newspaper which, I suppose, was hot stuff when we weren't even a gleam in our grandfather's eye. Listen to this ad which says that a company has an 'extensive assortment of gentlemen's and youth's fine otter, seal and nutria caps. Purchasers would do well to give us a call, at the old established stand, No. 4 South Fourth street, before purchasing of our more noisy competitors.' Isn't that simply killing! I'd like to see an advertiser call his competitor 'noisy' in these days without getting bumped off."

The three girls laughed as Boots continued to read.

"I shall tell my dear husband when he comes in that it was very naughty of him to leave a copy of this new penny paper about the house. The advertisements in it are positively so delightful that I shall be wanting to leave my own fireside and travel across the Atlantic Ocean in one of those elegant packets. London and Paris—just think of it—where they make the most ravishing gowns, pelerines and corsets. But I should just as soon dream of making a short visit to heaven for my dear husband would never consent to my making such a long, hazardous voyage in spite of all the comforts on these up-to-date packets . . ."

• • • •

"I suppose I really shouldn't be taking up all our time reading this funny old-fashioned paper because it's the last time I'll see you girls until I get back from Europe. Ted and I are sailing in May on the Queen Mary. Ted says he is going to spend his whole time in the swimming pool, but I intend to brush up on my tennis. I suppose the four days will pass quickly that way."

The girl in the cellophane jacket whistled: "Speaking of sailing, look what this fascinating Ledger says: 'Their accomodations for passengers are very elegant and extensive, and for whom beds, bedding, wine and stores of the best quality will always be provided.' weren't they quaint in those days. Waiter, the check please . . ."

BETT HOOPER.

The Way To Peace

Following is an extract from a recent bulletin issued by the Labor Party in Great Britain.

THE immediate reaction on the Continent to Germany's violation of the Locarno Treaty and her remilitarization of the Rhineland was such that in all probability half of Europe would already have been plunged into war but for the existence of the League of Nations. The discussions that have taken place during the recent days have helped to clarify and ease the situation, but there are obviously deep differences to be reconciled and issues of great importance to be decided if the fear of possible aggression in Europe is to be removed and a greater sense of peace security developed.

Germany's claim to equality and France's claim to security have already been formally recognized as just and mutually reconcilable in the formula of December, 1932, which was to provide equaliyt of rights within a regime of security. Little has been attempted in the meantime to give practical effect to that formula. The result has been that Germany, by a series of hammer blows, has taken equality, and whatever the reasons advanced in justification or extenuation of the action taken, the effect has been to aggravate the uneasiness and the fears of the rest of Europe. Today Germany has achieved equality, but Europe has not found security. That Germany has done so largely by treaty-breaking is obvious. When that is said, it is clear beyond all argument that there can be no return to the status quo. Germany will not willingly retrace her steps.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the present discussions will lead to a satisfactory settlement of the immediate issue. If the peace of Europe is to be made secure, Germany must frankly recognize that she has not only rights but obligations, and it will only be possible to find effective solutions of Europe's problems if she enters negotiations in this spirit. The supreme need is to make Europe secure against aggression. The principal essentials to collective security have long been recognized: arbitration, disarmament, non-aggression and mutual assistance in the event of aggression. This is the task that confronts Europe today, and the present potentially disastrous situation will only be retrieved by a system of collective security for all the nations, large and small, not only in the west of Europe but also in the east.

Crockett's "Blizzard."

From the Charlotte Observer.

The frequency of driving snowstorms recently has stirred an interest in the word—blizzard.

Somewhat obscure in origin, there is no doubt that it is appropriate in current usage. Like typhoon, or cyclone, there is power in the very word.

According to some researchists, the first time the word appears in English literature is in the autobiography of Davy Crockett, written in 1830. He says: "I saw two more bucks, very large fellows, too. I took a blizzard at one of them, and up he tumbled."

Earliest usage of the word, as a term descriptive of the weather, seems to have been in an Iowa paper in reporting the great storm of 1870. The imaginative editor must have adapted the word to give graphic description to the storm. If so, his choice was a good one, for just as Davy Crockett's blizzard made a buck tumble, so do these snowstorms make human beings run for cover.

The Oyster's Story

WHEN Calvert's adventurers arrived in Maryland, Chesapeake Bay was a larder stocked with food. Her rivers and creaks teemed with fish, and were paved with oysters and maninoses. The colonists ate the fish, neglected the oysters and wholly neglected the clams. The clams were new and strange to them. Perhaps it was because the oysters were bigger and better than any they had known that they avoided them. The shell fish lacked, it may be, that delicate brassy flavor to which they had grown accustomed in the English native.

But Necessity said, "You'll eat them and you'll like them!" And they did. Kent County annals tell of a stock of provisions so scant that the colonists were "forced" to eat shellfish. Something of the kind may have happened in St. Marys County in individual cases. Moreover the colonists had the example of the Indians. The shores of the Patuxent were dotted with Indian villages and you can spot their locations today by the accumulation of the shells of the oysters the red men ate.

As the colony grew in years the colonists learned to love oysters, oysters raw, baked, panned, stewed, fried and oysters as stuffing for turkeys. And never was there lack of them.

It was years after commercial enterprise, supplemented by mechanical inventiveness, took cognizance of an inland appetite and catered to it, that the necessity for conservation became manifest.

• • • •

The Maryland State Conservation Commission has done, is doing, good work. It has studied the diseases of oysters and sought remedies. It has seeded new beds. Between 1929 and 1932 3,206,522 bushels of oyster shells (the best clutch for the catching of oyster spat) were deposited in depleted beds.

The fact that oysters were not growing as fast as they were being consumed became startlingly apparent when motors superseded sails on dredge boats. Oysters may be caught with nippers, tongs, patent tongs, handscrapers and power dredges. Dredges are the most effective, and do most damage to the oysters they scrape but do not bring up. When strong and steady gasoline took the place of strong but uncertain and unsteady wind more oysters were caught and more damage done.

So one of the first acts of the conservationists was the banning of motors. The oysterman may use a motor while going to his work, but while actually dredging he must confine himself to sail.

There are oystermen who will tell you that this ruling is responsible for the dwindling in the number of dredges; but there is less truth in the assertion than thought-confusion. Unrestrained and unrestricted, the oystermen would have wiped out their own business years ago. Undeniably the number of dredges has decreased. There were 1,300 of them on the Chesapeake and its tributaries in 1886; by the end of the century there were but 900; today there are less than 200. But that doesn't mean that less oysters are being caught and consumed. They are simply being handled in another way. For one thing there are more private beds places staked out and seeded and cultivated.

But there is some excuse for the confusion of thought. If the ban on oysters were removed today there would be a sudden and noticeable increase in the number of dredge boats; and, so far from doing harm, here and there they might do good. But just for a time.

The Potomac River offers an illustration. In 1931 the commission was instrumental in having the Legislature pass a law forbidding handscraping in the river. It is still illegal to use scrapers there, but there is some poaching. The poachers declare they are doing good instead of harm; that the oysters are too thick; that they have no room to grow and consequently remain poor; and that instead of improving they are going to waste.

The matter is further complicated. Deputy commanders of Maryland patrol boats complain that Virginia conservation officers are not enforcing the law against handscraping. The law provides that offenders must be prosecuted in the State in which they reside. Maryland officials claim it is unfair to proceed against Maryland oystermen when Virginia oystermen are unmolested.

There are experts who, though they do not condone poaching, nevertheless sympathize with the poachers.

• • • •

In 1934 State Senator J. Cook Webster, who had voted for the conservation law of 1931, considering it wholly an emergency measure, examined the rock oysters of the Potomac, found most of them large and healthy, but others suffering from overcrowding, and straightway presented a bill permitting handscraping two months in the year.

His bill was defeated, but he is more than ever convinced that something ought to be done and done at once; otherwise the large oysters will die and the little ones will not have a chance to grow.

"It's like cultivating a garden and then allowing your vegetables to rot," says he.

There is something less than the whole truth in the old saying, "One can't be too careful." One can, apparently.

Philadelphia Students Ponder War and Peace

Temple And University Of Pennsylvania Undergraduates Pace Youth Of City In Antiwar Movements; Legion In Unusual Role.

By Eugene Pharo.

Special Correspondence of the Post.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE ironical approach to problems of war and peace that was expressed at Princeton University, very near here, on March 16, through the formation of the Veterans of Future Wars, has found a peculiarly fertile soil among the colleges and universities of Philadelphia and vicinity. There were, in fact, three types of such activity in effect among them before the glittering originality of the New Jersey students (from Kentucky and the District of Columbia) gave its scintillating decor to the country's front pages. One was satirical.

While it took nearly a fortnight for the University of Pennsylvania to get its post of the Veterans of Future Wars organized, and it was almost the end of March before Temple University swung into line, the latter effortlessly added a "touch" of its own. That it is a more somber one than that contributed by the Princetonians is only in harmony with the essential nature of peace movements in the Quaker City. The Princetonians were content to seek benefits for the presumptively living veterans of the next war; the Temple lads and lassies seek benefits for those who are destined to be killed, and in order that none shall be missed, they ask burial and death benefits for everyone who is apt to be made either into a soldier, or the corpse of a soldier. Pensions for their widows are requested as well, which will permit the future victims to get married and be supported now. They have called themselves the Victims of Future Wars.

The University of Pennsylvania chapter of the veterans exhibits the same Philadelphia solemnity by adding a request for funeral expenses to their demand for a bonus.

IT is not your correspondent's intention to rehash reports that have been made already from Philadelphia and numerous other points concerning the variations on the Princeton theme, but to point out certain related trends in this locality. This, in spite of the temptation to comment presented by the ladies' auxiliary of the Veterans of Future Wars that has been formed at the New Jersey College for Women, with its project for a monument to the "Unborn Soldier," and by the organization at Rutgers of the Association of Future War Propagandists.

Besides the satiric approach, there is in Philadelphia the serious, discussion-meeting, mass-protest-parade, letters-to-the-editor type of thing that has been fed most fully by the faculties and students of the smaller colleges, notably Swarthmore and Haverford, both of which have Quaker traditions. And there is the less emotionally wrought-up, comparatively free-minded trend in favor of nonpartisan, scientific investigation, that has colored the development of even such usually dogmatic organizations as the collegiate chapters of the Liberty League.

The Univesity of Pennsylvania chapter, for instance, has announced that it intends to be nonpolitical and nonpartisan even if it should lead to praise of some project of the New Deal, whether relating to armaments, international pacifism, national defense, or efforts to make everyone rich by running up his tax bills.

On the satiric side, there has been some preparation for reception of such propaganda as that emanating from Princeton, at Temple University, which was founded by the late Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell (a Civil War veteran), as a "poor man's university." It has probably the most democratic student body of any of the Philadelphia institutions; and is certainly at the other pole from Princeton. Nevertheless it was there that a few days before a visit to Philadelphia by Dr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, on Washington's Birthday, for the purpose of acquiring an additional degree—that of Doctor of Jurisprudence—that the impulse to spoof broke out among the editors of the university publication, the Owl. It was expressed through a cartoon of the President riding a kiddie-car in the direction of Temple, and showed a background of stock market quotations.

Advance advertisements of the publication upset the university authorities. As a result when the magazine came out, the cover showed only a reproduction of the American flag. Everyone at the same time denied that there had been any intention to show disrespect to the President. Yet the completed incident obviously enables anyone to choose from it about any brand of humor that seems personally congenial.

THE drive for peace by direct means, which is in the main quite humorless, is warranted to provide data at almost any date. Concurrent with the satiric and ironic suggestions recalled above, there have been several of these. For instance, there was in February a meeting of about 500 pupils from public schools and private ones, at the Penn Athletic Club, at which the practical means of procuring international peace through the operations of the League of Nations was canvassed under the leadership of Clark Eichelberger, executive director of the League of Nations Association, and of Thomas Que Harrison, who was billed simply as "a teacher and peace worker." The meeting was in the form of a youth forum for high school students. At it, representatives of 40 schools voted endorsement of the general youth movement for peace, especially through international co-operation.

On March 5 about 70 students got together at the University of Pennsylvania and formed the Penn Students Alliance. Besides support of world peace, this organization pledged itself to the additional objectives of "academic freedom, social security, and equality of opportunity."

LET'S NOT COMMIT SUICIDE

STUDENT PICKET.
Organizes Against War.

April 2 was dedicated to meetings for youths, whether in school or not, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Committee for Total Disarmament, at which speakers who have been popular at student peace meetings were to be discussion leaders. Co-operating in the series were the Philadelphia Council of Jewish Youth Organizations and the Young Friends Movement. Lecturers were chosen from the faculty of Swarthmore College and from the roster of the Peace Section, American Friends' Service Committee.

* * * *

CRITICAL ferment as expressed in the third of the three general movements mentioned, is best exemplified by several passages at arms (purely rhetorical) that transpired in the affairs of the University of Pennsylvania chapter of the Liberty League, early in March. These were provoked when the members of the chapter chose to elect as its president a candidate who opposed partisan criticism of the New Deal, in favor of unbiased debates from both sides of every question bearing on American institutions, and on current political developments.

Before the conflict between so-called hard-shell conservatives and liberals within the group was finally quieted, the chapter was reported to have been deprived of office space at the university and of the service of a stenographer. Some of the kick went out of the affair, however, when the college division of the league, from its Washington headquarters, sent word of its approval of the election of the non-partisan advocate, and seemed

Among the Magazines

What was called a "problem play" in the hey-day of Ibsen and Shaw is now known as the propaganda play, writes John K. Hutchens in the April issue of Current History. The difference in terminology is significant, he continues, enlarging as follows:

"The problem play attacked a general problem through individual character and destiny. Now, in an era of mass movement and approach, the attack on general problems is itself general. The impact is not that of persons but of forces. And, by no coincidence, most of this drama has come from groups working continuously together on a more or less common basis of political and artistic belief. Their work is the outstanding theatrical development in these years since 1929.

"Of these the Theater Union and the Group Theater are the most notable, although the most effective full-length propaganda play—John Wexley's 'They Shall Not Die,' based on the Scottsboro case—was offered by the not especially social-minded Theater Guild.

"The Group Theater founded in the season of 1931-32, is less revolutionary in tendency than the Theater Union, but through at least half its career it has kept close to the social scene. Claire and Paul Sifton's '1931' was a smashing picture of the disintegration of character through unemployment. John Howard Lawson's 'Success Story' lashed the moral decadence of competitive commercial struggle. And last year, with 'Awake and Sing' and a bill of one-acters, 'Till the Day I Die' and 'Waiting for Lefty,' the Group introduced the playwright of the hour, Clifford Odets, who continued this season with 'Paradise Lost,' dramatizing in type characters the bewilderment of the middle class.

"The Theater Union, which began in 1933 with 'Peace on Earth,' the Sklar-Maltz diatribe on the munitions racket, has hewed more closely to a single line: the plight of the exploited—on the docks of a Southern seaport in 'Stevedore,' in the West Virginia coal mines in Maltz's 'Black Pit,' in the frustrated revolt of 'Sailors of Cattaro,' among the mountain folk lured into the textile mills of Albert Bein's 'Let Freedom Ring.'

"These are plays that belong to the new and fighting propaganda theater. They are not uniform in quality, of course, or even in method. Some, like 'Peace on Earth' and 'Success Story,' have been hysterical and crude, not so much plays as first steps in a militant program. Others, like Odet's 'Awake and Sing,' have carried their themes in conventional patterns. And in any case they have succeeded or failed on their basis as good or bad theater.

Trade Is Trade

Writer Forgets Importance Of Increase In Total Volume Exchanged.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will you not indulge a few observations on your editorial of March 28, relating to "The Chief Sources Of Jobs?"

Examining the various angles of public opinion, I am convinced that there is a common aim in practically all of it; we all desire work for the unemployed; current issues are wholly based on methods which involve the amount of information of the proponents. Two incompatible methods are being tried by the present Administration. Both the AAA and the NRA depended for their success upon a nationalistic economic policy; the Department of State has pursued an international economic policy.

You state: "We already know that the durable goods and construction industries are the chief pools of unemployment." That is true, but the unanswered question is, who will buy or use the new construction to be planned? Nothing short of a policy which will simultaneously provide for increased production and increased employment can do anything to improve the situation.

I also desire to discuss some of the points raised in your final paragraph:

"After its clear and able summarization of the general principles that should govern a national approach to the unemployment problem, it is disappointing that the National Association of Manufacturers concludes with a bold assertion that the 'importation of foreign goods affect injuriously American employment.' Since the prosperity of our exporting industries depends upon our willingness to import this assumption is clearly unfounded."

A calculation based upon reports of the Department of Commerce shows that for each hour of employment in the automobile industry, a value of $1.451 was produced; in the production of shoes and cotton goods the figures respectively were $0.736 and $0.585. Now when the Government arranges for the importation of shoes from Europe and cotton goods from Japan in order to create a foreign market for automobiles, it would seem to be trading the jobs of two shoemakers or weavers for the job of one auto-mechanic.

Why should we arrange for foreign commerce at so great a sacrifice of domestic employment? It is not good logic to add the jobs of those engaged in producing for the foreign market without subtracting the jobs of those displaced by imports. Why so much concern about the prosperity of those engaged in exporting goods? We can gain by foreign trade in articles which we do not produce. But competitive foreign trade can win nothing for us, and will be a loss in all cases except when we have no unemployment problem.

I shall be glad to discuss this point further with anyone who holds the opposite view. We can both learn. GUY CLINTON.

The Death Sentence.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the men and women of good will who are working for the abolition of capital punishment fail to capitalize the Hauptmann affair, with its unparalleled exhibition of sadism and political exploitation, they will miss a major opportunity. To all great social movements there comes now and then a psychological moment for action. Unless the public has been so brutalized by the most spectacular and heartless court trial of the century, together with the harrowing cat-and-mouse uncertainties which have followed it, as to be inaccessible to reason the present should be one of those moments.

If the convicted criminal had been sentenced to life imprisonment as he would have been in any one of the many States which have rid themselves of that ancient barbarism, the death penalty, most of the spectacular features of the trial would have been spared us and all the sadist excitement which has followed it.

If it were a dumb animal that was being forced to suffer and be resuscitated and forced again to suffer and be resuscitated and then again—the Nation could be depended on to unite in one unanimous howl of enraged protest. Yet men, young boys even—are forced to suffer such agonies in our country every year. That sort of inhumanity is incidental to capital punishment and always will be.

In the light of such facts as these is it too much to hope that sometime in the not too distant future one or more of the so-called "conservative" States of the Union will become sufficiently realistic to abolish the ancient evil of capital punishment and make such an experience as the Hauptmann trial as outmoded a form of communal entertainment as the practice of guillotining one's political enemies or throwing Christians to the lions?

The Election In Germany.

Baltimore Sun—"The results show how amazingly efficient that (the Nazi) machine has become. It is to be doubted, however, that the returns show anything else * * * Outside of Germany everyone knew exactly what they would be. The foreign offices in Paris and London can hardly have been impressed by this wholly artificial display of German 'solidarity' * * * If Hitler thinks otherwise, he is merely deceiving himself. This demonstration of Hitler's strength as a political boss may, on the other hand, have its uses at home. It will serve to enhance his prestige among unthinking Germans and at the same time will dampen the spirit of those critics who lately had been plucking up sufficient courage to question the wisdom of the rearmament program."

Louisville Courier-Journal—"The result cannot be discounted. The election was a patent sham as the means of selecting a new Reichstag. * * * Nevertheless, the people expressed their true convictions when they approved the program of 'peace and equality' as enunciated and carried out by Der Fuehrer. As a popular referendum on the Rhineland occupation the vote unquestionably was the vote of a united nation. * * * Sunday's plebiscite consolidates Germany and stiffens French resistance. Intransigeance on both sides is the probable result. What peace plans Hitler now will offer will come as the plans of the German people, and as such they no doubt will be rejected by the present French government."

New Orleans Times Picayune—"The spectacle of an entire population standing at attention and chanting the hymn 'Make Us Free' at the order of a regime which has so largely deprived it of freedom in the democratic acceptation of the term, is one of the strangest manifestations of a curiously disordered period in human history. How many among them, it may be wondered, were secretly sending up prayers for another and a better kind of freedom than their Fuehrer plans or permits?"

Kansas City Star—"An electorate ridden by incessant propaganda, shut off by propaganda and subjected to a psychology of fear from secret police activities cannot be said in the ordinary sense to cast a significant ballot. On the other hand, there can be no reasonable doubt of the widespread popularity of the Nazi dictatorship and its policies today in Germany. Yesterday's election proved nothing, but there was nothing to be proved."

New York Herald Tribune—"Whatever the methods whereby Hitler has achieved his spectacular total, and whatever the reality behind it, it at any rate demonstrates again the utter impossibility of any internal challenge to the foreign policy upon which Der Fuehrer has embarked. A largely rearmed Germany in the hands of men resolved to break the last vestige of outside control imposed by defeat in war, and to regain as rapidly and directly as may be the status of a fully equal and sovereign great power, has become a fact upon the international scene."

Detroit News—"If the Sunday election has strengthened Hitler in dealing with foreign powers, we wonder if it has not weakened him within his own country. Who knows what is going on inside the head of some would-be successor, whose plans do not call for peace after the military machine has been perfected? These are some of the thoughts that must be passing through the minds of European statesmen."

Excerpts From Our Letters

Re Section 213.

In re Section 213: Is marriage contrary to public policy? A man and woman enter the Government service under competitive requirements of the Civil Service. They meet but are forbidden to marry on pain of the one or the other losing his or her job. Even say that they do marry long prior to the enactment of the measure. One of them, if the law is enforced, must forfeit rights legally obtained, suffer leases on contracts and obligations impossible of discharge on the salary of one.—Junius, jr., Washington.

Agricultural Subsidies.

The dense ignorance concerning economic problems and for which our schools and colleges are primarily responsible is nowhere better illustrated than at Washington in connection with the subsidies to agriculture. There is no obligation on the part of the Government to make agriculture profitable regardless of the number of men so employed than is the Government obliged to make any other branch of industry profitable.—Henry Ware Allen, Wichita, Kans.

Oregon Stamp.

In contemplating an Oregon stamp, the only portrait thereon should be of Marcus Whitman—the only man whose invincible patriotism prevented sale, or cede, or Oregon to a foreign nation! His was an unconquerable determination that Oregon should not go out of the United States territory to the enrichment of a foreign country; his the splendor of a patriotism that took him over the perilous overland trip to a Congress then contemplating such a sale.—B. Loudun, Merchantville, N. J.

Cause Of Wars?

Wars will never cease owing to the following: When the energy of those peoples who possess the fairest lands on earth has been depleted, it is necessary that these possessions pass to the hands of a more vigorous people. This makes a people's title to their possessons their ability to enjoy and power to retain them, which title is the only one that will be respected. As a result of this fundamental law people are ever readjusting their respective positions. No laws or treaties devised by man can prevent this readjustment, which process makes war unavoidable.—A. E. Kielly, Havana, Cuba.

History Teachers.

The teachers of history and other social studies in this section of the United States, nearly all of whom are well acquainted with the character of the work done in the Washington schools in this field of teaching, are most grateful to the newspapers of Washington which have defended the Washington history teachers from the recent vicious attacks on them. — Edgar Dawson, New York City.

Use of the Siren.

The District Commissioners are sane, sensible men of judgment and experience conducting their busines as they believe for the welfare of all. If they conceive the siren to be a protection to the public, let them abandon the use of that curse for six months during which time they may learn what paravail excrescence the fire department carries when it leans upon its noise rather than its intelligence for safety.—Joseph A. Conry, Washington.

Publicity Bathers.

Just a few minutes ago I shut off the radio after having listened a while to a program about events in connection with Bruno Hauptmann's execution at Trenton. A thought struck me in connection with the entire wicked affair—that it offers possibly the most brilliant chance that has ever presented itself to crystallize public sentiment against capital punishment. As it is, we have the politicians bathing nakedly in the public hysteria and a variety of other public bathers confessing all over the place.—Easter Egg, Washington.

Little Red Rider.

I see that the Sisson bill to repeal the red rider will not reach the floor of the House before April 27. Like the rest of our sober-minded citizens, I will be glad when this pestiferous red controversy is over. There are too many well-meaning shirtsleeve patriots who have the fault of telling us what should not be done to the neglect of what should be done. — Tipton Talbott, Washington.

The Florida Canal

Correspondent Summarizes Arguments Favoring Relief Project.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to the several articles, editorials, etc., appearing in The Post with regard to the Florida Canal, I desire to call your attention to certain inaccuracies in the statements made. This letter is an attempt to place before the public certain facts with regard to this project about which you are evidently not completely informed, or with reference to which you have been misinformed.

I think this can best be done by a very brief recitation of the official record as presented to a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and which appears in the published hearings of that sub-committee. This is, very briefly, as follows:

1. The project has been exhaustively examined by the War Department through the Corps of Engineers, pursuant to act of Congress. This examination has included elaborate physical and economic surveys, which have taken more than six years to complete. The project was also examined by the engineering division of the Public Works Administration. It was further studied and examined by a special board of review consisting of Army engineers, Public Works Administration engineers and an engineer from civil life. In addition to the above, a special board of engineers appointed by the chief of engineers of the Army has made an extended and intensive study of the possible effect of the project upon the ground water supply of Florida.

[In response to a direct inquiry, the PWA informs us that it turned down this project on the ground that it is not economically feasible.—Editor.]

2. The minimum annual benefits found by any of these examining agencies were $7,500,000, or 3 per cent on $250,000,000.

3. The cost of the project as determined by the Board of Review and approved by the chief of engineers, is $143,000,000. Repeated mention of a cost ranging from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 can only be the result of lack of information.

4. The project will have no harmful effect upon the water supply of Florida.

5. The project is justified economically up to a cost of more than $160,000,000, while its actual cost will be, as stated by the chief of engineers, $143,000,000.

6. The Board of Review recommended to the President that the project be constructed.

7. The project was duly authorized by the President under the provisions of the emergency appropriation act of 1935, on August 30, 1935, at which time there was allotted to the project the sum of $5,000,000. Since that time two additional allotments of $200,000 each have been made.

8. Approximately 6,000 men are at present engaged on the work.

The above are the simple facts of the record and in the light of these, I feel sure that you will wish to correct statements and implications that have appeared in your columns to the effect that the project is not justified economically: that its value has been questioned by experts: that its authorization by the President was on impulse, prompted by the "Dixie" disaster (as a matter of fact the Coast Guard records show that the first distress signals were received from the "Dixie" three days after the President's action): etc. H. H. BUCKMAN.

Washington.

[Our correspondent does not examine the major criticism of the project. This is the denial of every principle of good government which is involved in starting an undertaking of this character without direct Congressional authorization, as a by-product of the work relief program.—Editor.]

Alexandria After Dark.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few weeks ago, I read with great pleasure the news that Alexandria was having three more police officers. However, my happiness was shortlived.

There are some very dimly-lit streets in certain parts of our city and they certainly do call for police protection—I mean someone on a beat. Strange as it may seem, an unescorted woman who happens to walk on these ill-lit streets late in the evenings is continuously liable to molestation by hoodlums.

I do hope that these few lines will stir up the better element of Alexandria to see that there is proper police protection for all citizens who happen to be on the streets on legitimate business, notwithstanding the hour. IVY LEE.

Liberals Feel Beaten By Tokyo Militarists

Correspondent Scans Hirota Government, However, To Find Militarists Not Advanced After Coup Stemming From Taxation Problems.

By Frank H. Hedges.

Special Correspondence of the Post.

Tokyo.

JAPAN has its first civilian Premier in nearly four years, a government in which all major elements in the political and extra-political world are co-operating, the prospects of a moderate legislative program and of a more equitable readjustment of the taxation system, yet the Liberals of Japan feel that they have lost the battle and are in a rebellious mood. The civilian Premier knuckled to the Ministry of War in forming his cabinet, the outstanding Liberal leaders who were among his first choices for the cabinet were not allowed to assume their portfolios and the army and navy are frankly preaching the need for increased appropriations and the strengthening of the national defense. The Premier himself, Koki Hirota, was an ardent nationalist in his youth and a disciple of Mitsuturu Toyama, octogenarian leader of the extreme Right who is a power in Japan because of his command over the soshi, an institution peculiar to this country.

Your correspondent is unable to agree with the opinion prevalent in foreign circles here, and to a large extent among the Japanese themselves, that the militarists have emerged from the February 26 insurrection and its aftermath stronger than ever. He believes that their grip on affairs, a grip which has been unshaken for nearly five years, is so definitely loosened that many years must pass before they can again become the virtually absolute masters of Japan under the aegis of the Throne.

ON the surface, there is reason for saying the militarists have not suffered but have gained from the recent troublesome situation, but this is only a surface appearance. They have unquestionably lost for a long time to come, perhaps permanently, the trust and confidence of the people of Japan. So bitter is the reaction in certain quarters against them that one Japanese states it is idle to talk of war with Soviet Russia now, since a nation cannot fight unless the people are behind the army and the Japanese people are not so at present.

TSUNEO MATSUDIARA.
Organizes Against Army.

That is a far extreme statement, of course, and if war should break out the people would rally as a man behind the fighting services. It would probably require a war to effect such a rally, however, and even the militarists do not desire to resort to such means.

The failure to include any outstanding Liberal leader in the new government, coupled with the army's successful blocking of the appointment of certain individuals and the demand for increased appropriations is reponsible for this disappointment among the liberal Japanese, a disappointment which is not justified. No government has ever been formed in Japan in which the army and navy did not dictate the appointment of certain ministers and, if they so desired, veto the naming of others. In the past this has taken place behind the scenes; in the present instance it was forced into the open. There are the best of reasons to believe that Premier Hirota adroitly maneuvered to bring this about, knowing that the public reaction would be against the army, that it would have to shoulder responsibility and that his own hands would be thereby strengthened.

HE has not formed a Liberal government, but he certainly has one that is moderate. He insisted against the army and prevailed over it on the inclusion of four political party leaders. He is retaining the portfolio of foreign affairs himself, at least temporarily, and during the past 12 months he has frequently been at odds with the military on foreign policy, so that it can only be assumed the Hirota conciliatory policy is now to prevail. His minister of finance is a banker by profession and has a sound grounding in economics, so he can be expected to keep in check the economic fallacies of army generals.

The Hirota government is not a particularly liberal one, it is not even the "strong national government" the people demanded, but it is safe and sane, it has the nation united behind it, and it can be counted upon to pursue a nonmilitaristic policy but not of such a nature as to rouse the active antagonism of the army and navy and so defeat its own ends. It is the best possible that Japan could expect, given existing conditions.

Mr. Hirota himself is a trained diplomat. Born of a poor family, he had to make his own way in life and is loved by the Japanese people for that. He came into maturity while the Russo-Japanese War feeling was at its height and was attracted by a military career. Japan's ignominious return of part of its war gains, the Liaotung Leased Territory, because of pressure from France, Germany and Russia, diverted him from war to diplomacy. He felt that Japan was weakest in this field, and that he could better fight his fight there than in uniform. He is not overly brilliant, but he is extremely shrewd, is an able political strategist, knows the world well and the comparative strength of other nations, including Russia, and is extremely stubborn once his mind is made up.

* * * *

ONLY two other men stand out prominently in the official group surrounding him: Dr. Eiichi Baba, his minister of finance, and Takukichi Kawasaki, his minister of commerce and industry. Barring such unforseen developments as the recent insurrection, Mr. Kawasaki should succeed Mr. Hirota as Premier within the next two or three years. He is an extremely able politician and is a strong power in the Minseito, the strongest party in Japan at present and with liberal tendencies. His career has been in appointive posts, so that he is acceptable to the bureaucrats. The army does not like him, but then the army does not like any man who has party affiliations. Mr. Hirota wished to have him serve as minister of home affairs, one of the most important posts in the government, and, because of its great political patronage and influence, one that corresponds to the Postmaster-Generalship in the United States. This was too much for the army and the Premier yielded this point, but remained adamant on Mr. Kawasaki's inclusion in some other post.

Dr. Baba steps from the presidency of the Hypothec Bank, the official land bank of the nation, into the finance ministership. Finance and big business breathed a sigh of relief on his assumption of this post, only to be greatly disturbed by his first official announcement, in which he said that state expenditures would have to be increased rather than reduced and the taxation system would be revised upward. So violent was the reaction on the stock exchange that Dr. Baba hastily supplemented this with a second explanatory statement reassuring the business world which trusts him.

His policy will, however, be a positive one in contrast to the negative principles of the late martyred Korekiyo Takahashi. Dr. Baba will permit the return of easy money, will issue national bonds beyond the plans of Mr. Takahashi, will consent to increased national budgets and will move to revise the present taxation system. Most of this will be done gradually and in such a way as not to dislocate business.

* * * *

THE proposed taxation revision is of paramount importance. No one, it is believed, will deny its necessity. Japan's whole industrial system has been built up at the expense of its farmers. It may be that it was the only possible method, but it can not be continued indefinitely. Barred from immigrating and with land already near its maximum production, industrialization was the only path open for Japan. In order to bring about industrialization Government subsidies in one form or another were essential. In order to obtain funds for such subsidies, the farmers of the nation were disproportionately taxed.

Heart Without Beauty.

By Margaret MacAlman.

When April comes to mean . . . another April!
And summer leaves but ashes in the mouth;
When unremarked are birds returning south
On wings aware of autumn and its chill
Prelusion; when finally the anguished heart
Refuses to acknowledge this December,
Then let the heart be stone, lest it remember
Too well how seasons have contrived to part
Love and its fiercely cherished hour! Left
With such frail defense as youth against the bright
And bitter torment of each day and night,
Oh, let the heart be stone—be swiftly cleft
From this betrayal of the pulse until
It rediscovers beauty . . . heart be still!

Picture.

By Hazel Detwiler.

A young wind stirs the fragrance of the peach tree
And a shower of blossoms drifts to the ground.
A shower of sweet petals, and the brown twigs
Reach out bare fingers, sorrowing
For beauty that has fallen from them.
They do not know their immortality;
They do not know that fruit will hang, heavy and sweet,
Weighting down their branches.

On Second Thought

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

EXTREMELY interesting were the reactions of two New York critics to Paul Engle's book of poetry, "Break the Heart's Anger," which I discussed in this column two weeks ago. In the Herald Tribune, Ben Ray Redman hailed it as the work of a new Whitman; Peter Monro Jack, reviewing it for the Times (which was overly enthusiastic about Engle's first book), scoffed thinly and raised his eyebrow in disdain. On the basis of these two reviews and further thoughts of my own gained from a second reading of the poems, I wish, as the politicians so often do, to revise and extend my remarks for the record.

Neither Jack nor Redman is equipped to criticize the book from a purely technical point of view; nor is either critic so deeply versed in politics and economics as to bring to their remarks the weight of either Left or Right authority. Of the two, Redman approached the revolutionary ardors of the youthful poet with much the greater sympathy. He saw in it what Jack completely missed. Also interesting is the fact that neither the editor of the Times or the Herald Tribune saw fit to assign this outstanding book to a critic whose ordinary duty is to assay the trend of modern poetry. Both Jack and Redman approached the book, as it were, from the outside.

AND so, for the time being, any competent discussion of the poetic or even dialetical merits or demerits of the poet Engle must be withheld. On the first score I would say briefly that the poems are rich in imagery, moving, communicative. At times they are wordy, occasionally they are repetitious in phraseology, and Engle suffers from certain tricks which can be annoying. But despite this, there is a sweep and a vision and an imaginative power which makes this book the most important contribution to American poetry in a long time. Engle has remarkable reportorial instinct and through a phrase makes you see a people, a country, an event. He is essentially objective. But behind his objectivity is a humanitarian urge, and a revolutionary excitement, which turns what he observes into something felt and, what is even more significant, something completely understood. I might even put it that in his youth he has attained the same view of "a world to gain" that Beatrice and Sydney Webb have at last found in their honorable age.

The critic Jack, however, looks upon Engle's revolutionary poem (the book is, in reality, one long-sustained effort) with the jaundiced eye of the reactionary and gives himself away completely when, with a sort of British superiority, he says: "His 'American Song' was properly praised (I think) as a public and popular sort of poetry that one hoped might be a part of general urge toward the renewal of youth and poetry, with the morale at least assured." This, he says bluntly, has not happened, and he goes on to damn Engle for what he thinks is poetic failure.

ALMOST as bluntly, I would say that a "renewal of youth and poetry" is almost exactly what Engle has achieved. Jack, the reactionary, would seemingly have youth sing beautifully from the world as it is. But no poet for a long time, looking at this world, has been able to do this. This world today is not a world of "youth and poetry" of the old kind that is to be had for the asking. Engle, very early, has found this out. The only poetry there is in this world lies decisively where he has discovered it. Not among the ruins—even T. S. Eliot failed to find it there; not among decay and reaction; not among the dictatorships of the mind and spirit of Germany or Italy; not among the growing fascism of England or America. But just where the Webbs find it as their long and distinguished career is ending.

In "Break the Heart's Anger" there is a surge forward, a cry for revolution, a linking of Soviet communism directly with our own democratic history. This, again, is what the Webbs found in Russia. Engle looks upon the great experiment almost scientifically and then puts aside what I call the mechanics of party politics to sing his song upon the theme of a universal birth of the brotherhood of man. (Is it the poet's duty to draw a micromatically exact map to his promised land?) He sees a world: not nations, and man: not men. But Jack from behind the barricades of smug intolerance says, with invidious scorn, that all he has done is to "scold." This shutting of the mind to what (with all its faults) is in the book to be read is typical of the Times, of course, and the result is, as usual, not criticism, but exactly what, by inference at least, Peter Monro Jack and all his crew believe is what is wrong with any poetry that does not tweet of daffodils. And that is propaganda, but not propaganda for man's betterment, but for the status quo, something of which no poet—whether a Goldsmith or a Whitman (!)—has ever been able to afford.

REDMAN, on the other hand, writing for what little remains of the same paper for which Karl Marx was once a correspondent, the Herald-Tribune, gets the true feeling, which is just what Jacks says is not there: youth and poetry! He is moved by Engle's poem: Jack says, "His poetry does not show . . ." and yet Redman's excited appreciation is definite proof that to one amenable to poetry it does show and it does move. Redman gets what Engle is driving at—for Engle drives at a hot pace across the countries of the earth, through the doomed countryside where all is disordered and disintegrated, towards (even into) the new world that is in the making.

The Times entitles the Jack review: "Paul Engle's Poetic Apostrophes to the Nations," and these prosaic words tell you all that Jack claims to have found in the book. When he quotes, he does so from obscure passages of the book, to give you a wholly erroneous idea of Engle's mastery of words and ideas. The Jack review in short is a vicious attack upon Engle for his having dared to go beyond what The Times in its famous first page review of "American Song" wanted him to be—a popular versifier of American sounds and sights, and a worshipper of its past trails and outposts. Jack has done his job for his masters, but stupidly.

ABOVE the Redman review stand these words: "Witness of Doom and Prophet of a Dream: Paul Engle Sings of Revolution With the Full, Long Breath of a Young Walt Whitman." Again this heading tells what the critic has found. The contrast is striking. At least Redman has been honest; he has not had to pull chestnuts out of the fire for someone else. He has read the book, and he has told what Engle has said. His quotations are not snidely chosen. They are indicative of the poem as a whole. He has seen and written, as any honest critic could not fail to see or write, that Engle has achieved (not perfectly: Redman points out some of Engle's most objectionable faults) exactly what The Times says it hoped he would achieve: the expression of youth and poetry.

And as opposed to Jack's declaration that Engle is confused and unscrupulous and has "steamed himself into a position he cannot possibly sustain either technically or dialectically," Redman sums up as follows: "He is never obscure and there is no confusion in his thinking, and, unlike certain other poets of the Left, he is so intent upon the importance of what he has to communicate that he has no time or use for verbal mystification. Like that 'hard lean shafted arrow of a man' of whom he speaks, his poem is 'feathered with dream and tipped with the flint mind.'"

I would not have gone to such lengths with my discussion of these two criticisms were it not for two things. First The Times review irritated me for its lack of understanding and its obvious disappointment because Engle followed the wrong path. But upon second thought my irritation has turned to appreciation for, by the very tenor of the Jack review, it seems to me to be shown conclusively that Engle has done those things which, in my articles of the last three weeks. I have said is the poet's duty.

And, secondly, upon re-reading the poem, I have felt that Redman has seen it for what it really is: communicative revolutionary poetry that anyone can understand and be frightened by, as The Times was; or moved by, as Redman and myself have been. I do not know what the orthodox Marxians may think of it, nor does that matter as far as I am concerned. For dialectics are not the sum of poetry; they may be the springboard, but the dive into the depths of emotion is the thing. And Engle has most beautifully plunged.

Freuchen of the North Country

Peter Freuchen, Arctic Dweller, Spins His Eskimo Tales.

IF you will look into Jeannette Mirsky's "To the North!" that long and robust summary of Arctic exploration, you will find just three references to Peter Freuchen. In 1906 he went along, humbly as a stoker, on the Erichsen expedition to map the Northeast and last remaining unexplored segment of Greenland's coast line. In 1912 he and Knud Rasmussen made their famous dash across the Greenland ice cap—the first crossing since Nansen's in 1888—traversing the 500 miles from Thule to Denmark Fjord, by dog sledge, in the remarkable time of 17 days. There, 20 years and 20 days after Peary had left his cairn in the most northern land in the world, Freuchen found it (he could still see the footsteps, and the places where Peary had picked up his stones). The last reference is to Freuchen in Copenhagen, doubting with Rasmussen the truth of Dr. Cook's bravura gesture.

So meager these items are. It should be a lesson for us to dig deeper than summaries.

Because in "Arctic Adventure: My Life in the Frozen North," Peter Freuchen fills out the self-portrait of one of the most Homeric figures in our time—Homeric in stature, simplicity, courage, frankness, sympathy and the sheer innate ability to spin a tale.

• • • •

AN upstanding, mountainous young Dane, he was pottering around with medical school when the sight of a patient, whom the doctors had miraculously cured of appalling injuries, being run down in the street and killed by an automobile turned Freuchen abruptly away from "civilization." There was a sea call in his blood and he ran off to the north. And the saga from there on, throughout its 467 pages, is a magical, bountiful tale of how Freuchen fitted himself, heart and soul, into the strange life of the Greenland Eskimos.

For the Erichsen expedition inoculated his blood with the far north, and he stayed there until the loss of his Eskimo wife and the maiming of his foot by freezing made the life impossible.

A Danish farm, an airplane trip around South America, and success at Hollywood may have seemed to alter the old Peter Freuchen, but his heart must be still in the settlement he called, with poetic justice, Thule—the "ultima Thule," the most distant land of the ancients.

• • • •

UP there behind Cape York, just short of Peary's Etah, he settled down to run a trading post and thus claim the land for the Danes. It was a bleak country, with mountains of soapstone, acres of gravel, and then the months-long winter of snow and blizzard. One mail a year came in, and Freuchen kept the 365 newspapers on a shelf, read them one a day.

Fluent in the language, just and kindly, he grew intimate with the Eskimos—shared their dances and coffee parties, sat in when the medicine man called devils out of the ground, scolded murderers (oddly, that was all he could do with them), bartered, hunted, ate, and talked endlessly with the inhabitants.

Out of this familiarity with the Eskimo, spread easily through the book, grows a picture of them which is almost unequaled in its understanding. They are curious folk, almost literally reversed from us. They never say "I"—"one sees someone coming" is the first person locution. They never say good-by, or mention the dead by name. They are glad when the long sun goes down. They never say "thank you"—that would be degrading, and make the giver uncomfortable—"by gifts one makes slaves and by whips one makes dogs" runs the saying. It is courtesy to be eternally self-depreciating—if an Eskimo has some especially good food to offer a guest, he remarks upon the foul fare which his slovenliness as a hunter has rendered so unworthy of the exalted guest.

Indeed, this reverse-English technique becomes a matter of hilarity to our ears. If an Eskimo has come to the trading post with a load of fine fox skins to barter, he will protest for three days that his sledge holds nothing but junk, too poor even to think about. And when the trader sees the skins at last, he must throw up his hands and say he has nothing in stock with which to purchase anything so magnificent. Perhaps you can see the ridiculous possibilities when it comes time to settle the price. At least, read pages 285-289 for one of the funniest scenes in the whole tale.

"Arctic Adventure" Crowds the Canvas of Northern Exploits.

EVEN the book holds the character of the Eskimo, those people who will find themselves starving on a journey, and laugh uproariously to think that they have plenty of food at home. Horror and farce are side by side, each taken easily in his stride by Freuchen. His trip across the great central ice-cap with Rasmussen was an epic of endurance, and then when they came to a happy valley filled with musk-ox, the two of them had to play matador and picador to kill the beasts, since the party was out of ammunition.

Time and again Freuchen faced death—by starvation, by gangrene, by bear, by an iceberg's rolling over, by drifting away on floe ice, by sliding down a glacier entangled with a harpoon which pressed further and further into him—until the reader, in a goose-flesh, has to pinch himself and say that after all Freuchen lived to write the book. And then come amusing little pictures of high-jinks and horseplay. Rasmussen, Freuchen's sworn "blood brother," could come back from a trip which had killed two of his men, and then start parties which cause Freuchen to endow him with the name of "the Elsa Maxwell of the North."

It was a bluff, hearty, appallingly rigorous life. The North, says Freuchen, is no place for a man not sure of himself.

• • • •

WHEN Freuchen's girl in Denmark refused to come north to such a land—if the reader would like a last sample, it may be said that Freuchen records having to eat everything from rotten whale's flipper to grass and rabbit dung—he thought that his life was wrecked. A little Eskimo girl named Navarana soon cured that; he married her, and he shows her to us as an extraordinarily fine woman. They had a son and a daughter, and the glimpses of their upbringing in a land of blizzards and wolves are rather astonishing.

Freuchen writes of this great panorama of adventure amid strange people with all the ease and charm of a natural born storyteller. We won't come upon such good reading again in a month of Sundays. T. H.

Real Heroes

HERE is a book which parents might well keep on hand for the youngster who pores too long over the trashy funny papers or sits transfixed by the radio listening to some synthetic wild-west thriller. For these are real stories of American history which the children will devour, running from Columbus to Buffalo Bill. And if their teacher finds out how they have come to know so much, she'll want a copy too. The book is written in a simple, pleasing, lucid style to attract children of varying ages, and is illustrated with many pen drawings by an artist who unfortunately is not given credit on the title-page.

After every story there is a section called "Stories in Other Books" which the really ambitious boy or girl will delight in. There are also games and other activities suggested based on the stories. And (Bravo!) an index. M. B.

Irish Playwrights

Curtis Canfield Gathers Plays Which Reveal Young Irish Dramatic Surge.

By Morgan Baker.

EDITORS and publishers of dramatic anthologies should be periodically thanked for making widely available the texts of plays, not primarily to actors but to the ever-increasing number of play-readers. A great number of Americans are so situated that they rarely get a chance to see a first-rate legitimate performance of a first-rate play, but their interest in the drama nevertheless is an active and intelligent one. Reading plays is the only way they can keep up with it.

The cinema, perhaps, satisfies their desire for cinema, but not their hunger for good plays. There are still a great many kings' consciences to be caught outside the theater. So it is by this class, as well as by the students of the theater, that Prof. Curtis Canfield's collection, "Plays of Changing Ireland," will be especially welcomed.

Prof. Canfield has selected eight plays—five full-length and three one-act—to represent the modern Irish drama and to indicate its course during the past ten years. Examples of the work of the younger revolutionary playwrights as well as that of established authors have been chosen to present a rounded picture of the drama's development in Ireland. The plays included are:

William Butler Yeats' "The Words Upon the Window-Pane", Denis Johnston's "The Old Lady Says 'No!' ", Lennox Robinson's "Church Street", the Earl of Longford's "Yahoo", George Shiels' "The New Gossoon", Countess Longford's "Mr. Jiggins of Jigginstown", Mary Manning's "Youth's the Season . . .?" and Rutherford Mayne's "Bridge Head."

Now a word about the playwrights themselves. Yeats is the oldest dramatist represented. "Now that AE is dead," says Prof. Canfield, "Yeats is the last living connection between that early turbulent period, which saw Anglo-Irish literature arise from political despair and nationalistic fervor, and the new Ireland. Yet, at 70, he is still a contemporary in spirit to the school of younger writers who take pride in their modernity and their freedom from the canons of their predecessors. More than this, he is their standard-bearer."

Denis Johnston, only 35, has five plays to his credit, the one here printed being his first. Besides a playwright, he is an accomplished actor and film director.

Lennox Robinson's work is fairly well known in America, his "The White Headed Boy" and "Drama at Inish" having been included in the repertoire of the Abbey Theater Players here in Washington and elsewhere last season. In all he has written about 20 plays, all produced by the Abbey Theater. Robinson also is well known as a lecturer in this country and has conducted classes in the drama at Michigan and Montana Universities.

The Earl of Longford, though a native of London, has lived in Dublin since 1925 and is a director of the new Gate Theater. His wife, Christine, Countess of Longford, is also represented. She is a successful novelist and historian, her play here printed being taken from her novel of the same name.

George Shiels emigrated to America when he was 18 and spent six years in mining and railroading. He returned to Ireland and found success in story and play writing. He has had 10 plays produced at the Abbey.

Mary Manning is the youngest in the group but already has had three plays produced at the Dublin Gate Theater, including "Youth's the Season . . . ?" She is the wife of Mark DeWolfe Howe, Jr., of Boston.

Rutherford Mayne (Sam J. Waddell), land law commissioner of the Irish Free State, was one of the founders of the Ulster Theater in Belfast in 1904. He is an actor of note, and played the title role in O'Neill's "Emperor Jones" at the Abbey Theater. He has had a dozen plays produced.

Any attempt here at a critical analysis of these plays would be obiter dicta since Prof. Canfield has wisely included brief but illuminating expositions and introductions to them. The job of selection was admittedly a difficult one, but Prof. Canfield, who is a member of the staff at Amherst College, has done it well. Crudities of style and undeveloped technique, rather than triviality of idea or narrowness of application, he says, were the commonest ground for rejection. Which is fair enough.

Our Back Yard

IN the deep South where cotton is king, men, women and children live in miserable hovels, hardly fit for animals, never fit for human beings. So far as the rest of the world is concerned these poor, neglected people are lost—unworthy of attention by the very persons who hire them.

Howard Kester, of Virginia and the South, has been among these share croppers and tenants, learning how they exist, and helping them to organize themselves for a better life. Out of his experiences, and from the lives of these people, he has made an indignant pamphlet with a burning message for those callous, indifferent people who do not know of the uncalled-for slavery and misery of a forgotten class who, as Frazier Hunt said: "seemed to belong to another land than the America I knew and loved."

This is the kind of work that old John Brown would have loved, this work and this pamphlet—John Brown, Walt Whitman, Emerson, and all of their stature who would have kept America as it was before brother's hand was turned against brother and malice and intolerance stalked the land. The tragedy of the pamphlet is not that it will provoke controversy, but that so few people will read it—indeed, the great tragedy of America is that so few persons will take the trouble to look at the intolerable conditions of their own back yards. If you should read the pamphlet and learn how the share croppers and tenants live and work, you would learn that the indifference supporting such conditions breeds the discontent which is the support of dictators and tyrants. The balmy, pleasant South of Stark Young and Thomas Nelson Page cannot be found within these pages. J. C. R.

The Bridge to Music

Sir Walford Davies Leads the Music Lover Over the Bridge between Spirit and Mind.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

IN "The Pursuit of Music," Sir Walford Davies, English teacher of musical theory, has come close to writing a unique book. Among the many introductions and guides to the arcana of harmony and from which have come my way in the course of rather extensive reading, I have encountered nothing quite like it. For Sir Walford is both simple and abstruse, illuminating knotty points with homely similes and suggesting subtleties not ordinarily found in elementary treatises. His is a book at once easy and difficult to read—easy because of his lucid manner of explanation, and difficult because of his insistence that the reader use intuition as well as intelligence.

Sir Walford assumes that his reader is a person who enjoys listening to music, but is continually puzzled by what music is about—what it is saying to us and how it is saying it. He also assumes that his reader is willing to think, and is not merely expecting to be enlightened instantaneously by a magical process of absorbing information through his eyes. He demands that his reader listen with every faculty and not only with his ears.

"As well expect to get the satisfaction and nourishment of a good meal from a cookery book, as to get music joy from books about music," he says. "Both the ear and the mind of every listener must experience it for themselves. Each listener must 'taste' the chord of C major, and know that taste, if he is ever to put his mind to the Jupiter symphony. A description of the fragrance of an English garden would not mean much to one who had never smelt a rose. A theory of music which explained a chord and its uses would have no value whatever to one who had never known for himself the sound of the chord itself."

No quotations can do justice to Sir Walford's manner of exposition, for the entire book is a logical progression from the rudiments to the complexities of his subject. The musician as well as the layman will find profit in his pages. I particularly recommend his chapters on "Modulation and Harmonic Perspective," "Three Lines of Harmonic Thinking," and "Sonata Form."

Sir Walford is, like all those who understand the spiritual purpose of music, a mystic at heart. "I believe that all so-called abstract music is ideal program music, as between God and the composer and yourself. You must try to find the program. Composers are doing it, and the listener can. That sonata you heard played was entireyl 'to your mind.' It was not? Then you did not, perchance put out all imaginative mind to meet it? Its program, we may reverently suggest, was nothing less than to build a bridge (as Beethoven put it) from the mind of the Spirit to chance minds (such as yours and mine) via the composer's mind."

Light Opera

ALREADY known as a cicerone for grand opera, J. Walker McSpadden comes forward with a guide to "Light Opera and Musical Comedy," a volume containing synopses of 187 works ranging from Giovanni Battista Pergolesi's "La Serva Padrona" to Vincent Youman's "No, No, Nanette." The synopses vary from act-by-act narration to single compressed paragraphs. Operas are classified by nationality, and each section has a sketchy historical preface, while to each composer is given a few lines of biography.

One would like to know why the compiler placed "Il Trovatore" in the collection, unless he wished to imply that Verdi composed his setting of Gutierrez's horrendous melodrama with his tongue in his cheek. And one is also puzzled by the principle of selection which has included "Falstaff" and excluded "Die Meistersinger," admitted Stravinski's "Le Rossignol" and shut out Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnole."

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

THERE are two sorts of reading (perhaps this isn't my brightest day, to be remarking such a banality)—the sort that stirs you up, and the sort that quiets you down. Robert Haven Schauffler recognized that in a volume he called "The Poetry Cure," which held sections of especially selected poetry denominated with such titles as anodynes and mental pick-me-ups. Very striking it all was. Someone should do that in a volume of prose, or at least in a course of reading. But Emerson pointed out that we are always finding our un-acted-upon thoughts coming back to us from other people, which is most-dis-spiriting. So today's causerie will range the books under sweetness and light on the one hand, and a sharp and wary eye on the world on the other.

Indeed, for a long while I thought H. A. L. Fisher's "A History of Europe: (vol. III) The Liberal Experiment" (Houghton Mifflin, $4) was going to be sweetness and light. There is something peculiarly soothing about sitting calmly down to read of the French Revolution, immolated like a fly in amber, in a learned historical perspective and a style of refreshing precision. The Warden of New College, Oxford, is a man of distinguished parts; having given us ancient, medieval and renaissance Europe in the preceding volumes of his warmly welcomed history, he surely was the man, one thought, to give us the last century with a rinse of clarity. No permanent and authoritative history of Europe exists in English, it had been said, until the Warden came along. Bonaparte, Metternich and Castlereagh, the metamorphoses of France, Germany and Italy, and the Balkan imbroglios—this is the history's smooth and literate course toward our day.

The nineteenth century is the great century, implies the Warden. Everything since is a loss and degradation.

WELL! Let us see how a man who has digested nineteen centuries of Europe comports himself when he comes to a phenomenon which, even in our immature today, has been not incompetently described as one of the three or four great social movements in all history. I mean, of course, Soviet Russia.

Uncritically, mass-mindedly, with an unwillingness even to try to understand (which is almost embarrassing to observe), H. A. L. Fisher lumps communism with the Fascism of Italy and Germany. He sees no difference. "Totalitarian state . . . ruthless repression of liberty . . . maxims of despotism imposed by violence and propaganda," the historian says, looking at all three systems.

This does not appear to be any acute use of the historical method. Simply as thinking, without reference to any bias, it is poor going. How would the Warden account for the fact that Fascism or communism are diametrically, and at extremes, opposed? How, writing thus like a Sunday supplement, would he evaluate any difference—which is enormous—in purpose between the systems? The observer must come again to the axiom that the nineteenth century man simply cannot understand the twentieth.

One example more of this strange simple-mindedness. Writes the author: "The tragedy of the Great War was that it was fought between the most highly civilized peoples in Europe on an issue which a few level-headed men could easily have composed . . ." The naivete of that statement, as someone has nicely turned the phrase, beggars admiration.

BUT I have been tart, I'm afraid, through disappointment, through asking for an ideal intellect and not seeing the historian in his own time and culture. It is a lesson in a better sort of observation—that which sees its subject roundly and asks for something else only by implication—to read Henry Seidel Canby's "Alma Mater: The Gothic Age of the American College" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50).

Affectionately, with a sharp, pictorial eye, the present editor of the Saturday Review of Literature recalls his youth at Yale. The college town in the nineties and later with its own peculiar life, the professors with their primnesses, frustrations and jealousies, the students in all their varied but perpetuating types of athlete, social entrepreneur, grinds greasy and less greasy, and that rarity—the student possessed of genuine intellectual curiosity, and the monastic seclusion of collegiatism from the rest of the world—this is the field through which he takes us gently and nostalgically. Adolescence in an adolescent age, that appears to be the sum.

FOR pure and unadulterated sweetness and light, let me give you the Earl of Lytton's "Antony: A Record of Youth" (Scribner, $3). Here is the story of the 29 years enjoyed by Antony Knebworth, the son of the earl, told chiefly in letters between the growing youth and his family. Born with health, wealth, lofty social position, genuine brains and the gift of charm, Antony combined all vitrues and all amenities. No novelist would dare to paint a character thus; here is one in actuality, very much alive in these entrancing letters.

All of which makes, in our somewhat cynical and unimpressed age, very heady reading. It holds the childhood glow of the Fairy Prince legend—a Prince who went to Eton and Oxford, became a sportsman and an M. P. and a government official, and who was killed, quite needlessly, in an airplane crash. Yet, in the brief perfection of this life there is no romantic blindness. After being so charmed by Antony, it is moving, indeed, to read his letters: "We are the last surviving aristocracy in all the world . . . I think our day is done, because though we are trying hard now to build on logic there is too much logic the other way. We may be nice a little longer, and loved here and there a little longer individually, but the ice we walk on is cracking."

AND as to that "logic the other way," as it applies to this subject of youth, you will find few stronger expressions than Maxine Davis' "The Lost Generation" (Macmillan, $2.50). For one Antony in the world, there are a hundred thousand Joes and Dicks and Harrys. And to see these and talk with them, Miss Davis spent three months touring 10,000 miles about the country.

A person who goes blind is pathetic, but at least he has seen the world. A person who has always been blind is something else again, something deeply and inhumanly tragic. So with the effects of economic dislocation upon the unemployed worker, and upon the youth who grew up in the depression and never found work at all. All over the country Miss Davis found thousands of the latter, groping, hoping, moping, as she puts it. They have courage, sportsmanship, great honesty and a reassuring morality. But they are apathetic, quite without faith and belief, and they do not think for themselves. They wait meekly for "a benign future based on nothing but wishful thinking."

And in that Miss Davis finds a danger. "This lack of revolt is more ominous than active radicalism," she writes, with a deep wisdom. "This generation is straying aimlessly toward middle age. Soon it may be altogether lost. Then we as a nation will face a future dominated by a defeated citizenry, with nothing to lose and willing to try anything." Demagoguery and quackery could find no more perilously fertile soil.

News of Yesterday

Laurence Greene Collects Old News Stories to Show Journalist Technique.

By John M. Clark.

IT must have been more than two years ago when the first of the "news shot" books appeared. Photographers of almost evey exciting event of recent times were dug out of newspaper morgues, arranged at dashing angles, and edited with terse sub-titles in vivid fashion. Evoking a pleasant nostalgia and requiring only a few minutes to absorb completely, the books enjoyed a considerable success. And still do, as the new ones come out.

But it remained for Laurence Greene, of the Baltimore Sun, to think of adapting this old-diary technique to news stories of the past. The result is an interesting book. Of course, he was able to go a good deal further back into the files than the photographic editors, not being limited by the date of the camera's first general use. Accordingly, the appeal of his collection of "big" news stories—each of which is introduced with a paragraph or two of his own crisp writing to reconstruct the background of the event—lies not so much in the memories it summons up, but more in the flavor of bygone American days it can recall.

He starts with the story of the Boston Tea Party as reported in the Massachusetts Gazette and Boston Weekly News-Letter of December 2, 1773. He ends with a three-paragraph notice carried in the Netchez Democrat of June 29, 1914, bearing a Sarajevo, Bosnia date line and retailing the information that Archduke Ferdinand and his morganatic wife were assassinated that day by an eighth-grade student by name of Prinzip. Between these two stories are the contemporary newspaper accounts of such happenings as the Surrender at Yorktown, the Custer Massacre, the Sacking of the Capitol in 1812, the Johnstown Flood, the San Francisco Fire, the Titanic and so on—all fascinating reading.

The book bears an interesting sidelight on the development of the technique of newswriting. The earliest stories reprinted are quite formless, being mere hodgepodges of vague fact and fervid opinion buttressed by texts from proclamations and official communications. Gradually, as communication facilities enlarged and the public's response to newspapers warranted an expansion of mechanical and reportorial equipment, a formula for news writing evolved. But, at that, even at the time of Lincoln's assassination the device of telling who, what, where and when in the beginning of the story had not developed. News was reported chronologically so that it was not until the reader reached the middle of the story that he was vouchsafed the news that the President had been shot in Ford's Theater.

Furthermore, "color" apparently was the principal objective of the reporter even as late as the '80's; precision and detail were quite secondary. For example, nowhere in a long story from the New York Herald reporting the blizzard of '88 is mention made of the depth of the snowfall.

Today's reporters perhaps err as far in the other direction. Today, almost certainly, news stories creak with detail as they drone on in their prescribed monotone. If Mr. Greene, 50 years hence should write another book of the same sort, it will be surprising to read the story of the President's last address to Congress beside that of a considerable event of that future day. Spurred on by the competition of the radio, the newsreel and—soon—television, new and still more satisfactory methods of presenting news are bound to develop.

Russia Prepares for a War It Regards as an Impending Certainty

How well Russia is arming may be judged from these photographs, revealing her modern equipment for war. In the center above is Marshall Voroshilov, people's commissar of defense, with S. M. Budyonny, inspector of cavalry, and V. K. Blucher, commander of the special banner of the Far Eastern army, standing behind him. The picture on the left shows a troop of Russian cavalry. On right, one of the Soviet army's big tanks flies through the air as it nimbly takes a barrier in tank unit maneuvers.

Observer Describes Soviet Preparations

Spirit of Conflict Has Long Been Deliberately Fostered by Those in Charge of Communist Education.

By Opal Corbin Lee.

I picked up a newspaper and saw the headlines, "Stalin Warns War Will Follow if Japan Touches Outer Mongolia," "Soviet Is Prepared to Go to War With Japan if Necessary." With quick interest I read on through the account of an interview which Stalin had but lately given to a prominent American newspaper man and I found its implications stimulating alike to memory and speculation. Like the storied Walrus, Mr. Stalin seemed to feel that the time had come to talk of many things and in his remarks he provided a postscript to the trend of Soviet policy three or four years ago which was a curious mixture of consistency and contradiction.

It has not been long since I was talking to a Russian emigre, one who was only a short time out of the USSR, comparatively speaking. In the course of the conversation I remarked that I should like to plan an Italian trip for my young daughter during the summer "if present war clouds are sufficiently blown over."

"War clouds?" repeated my acquaintance in slightly puzzled tones.

"Certainly—war clouds!" I replied.

My young Russian laughed slightly but her laugh held a note of sadness.

"For a moment I could not think," she confessed. "Here in your militaristic, overbearing capitalist state one sees so little and hears so little of the war preparation that one who does not follow your papers too closely loses the consciousness of men fighting somewhere in the world; but, ah, it is so different in our peace-loving Soviet country. There, where all men are brothers, we are daily preparing for bigger and better carnage. We hear war, we talk war, we feel war!"

Rumors of War Always Afloat.

I realized just what she meant. In 1930 and 1931 we were living in the south of Russia, where my husband was concerned with the erection of certain oil refinery equipment for the Soviets. We spent the first year in Baku and the second in Grozny, and in both places we heard persistently of the imminent struggle. We observed a concentrated training of soldiers and civilians alike which indicated a conception of threatening war very dissimilar to the abstract generalities which we were accustomed to hearing in our own country. Americans recognize intellectually that the last war to end war did nothing of the sort; they repeat certain formulae as to the inevitability of another world-shaking clash of nations, but emotionally they fail to visualize it. "War just couldn't happen here"—the feeling persists whether or not the intellect backs it up.

But for years the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics has been in rigorous and constant training for a conflict presented not as a remote contingency but as an impending certainty. This nation lives under a routine very like that of a country already at war. The matter of pictures, for instance, will serve as a simple illustration of the regulations obtaining. A camera has always been extremely suspect in the USSR. We were informed that any pictures we might take while we were there must be developed and censored before we could take them out of the country.

Snapshots Forbidden But She Took Some.

There were the strictest rules against any snapshotting in or around railroad stations, even though they might be only those of humble Caucasian villages. Some pictures, it appeared, might be turned to military account by enemies of the proletariat with a potential desire to disrupt the transportation service. The harbor at Baku was equally sacrosanct—no, we were not to photograph even the launches or fishing boats, anything that had to do with the waters of the Caspian Sea! Nor were the refineries to serve as models for any ill-advised activities with a kodak. I might add, though, that without the least desire to dynamite a native railroad station or to blast the fish out of the Caspian, we did bring out some very interesting, expressly forbidden pictures of one sort or another. Americans are like that.

The arts of propaganda which began to be used in war time have been perpetuated and developed to such a state of technical perfection that our own efforts of 1917 and 1918 appear pathetically amateurish by comparison. Yet, surely, we in America learned much about the dangers inherently possible in such attempts to rouse the mass mind to action. The almost inevitable sacrifice of reason upon the altars of prejudice and passion was only too obvious.

But nothing we have developed, neither our diversity of share-the-wealth plans nor our current Townsend outburst, can begin to touch the finished technique of the Russians in the line of aggressive propaganda. Under the Red flag this force has been applied to two major objectives, the one an exaltation of communism with its concomitant debasement of capitalism, the other a cultivation of a deep-seated and well-organized military spirit, rooted in a blind antagonism to anything foreign and grown wholly dependable by the time the Soviet Union should come to face the rest of the world, gun in hand.

Military Demonstrations Are Daily Occurences.

Every public building has its posters and these posters don't depict summer cruises, either. Almost every day, certainly every week, sees its street "demonstration," with long lines of marchers ostensibly ratifying Communist sentiment. Through grotesquely caricatured figures and flamboyant banners the indefensibilities of religion, capitalism, kulaki and contra-revolutionaries are held up for the abhorrence of the faithful. Once I asked a Russian employe of the food trust—I was in his office attending to the interminable matter of food permits—how so many marchers were recruited if the population as a whole was as unenthusiastic about the Communist regime as I had been led to believe.

"It is simple to explain," he told me, not without bitterness. "In the morning an order comes to the office where you work to the effect that you and your associates are to take part in a demonstration during the afternoon. You go, you march, you carry a banner perhaps. You demonstrate against capitalism, against Poland, against religion—what does it matter. Haven't you observed the soldiers on the streets during a demonstration? If a marcher drops out as the parade turns a corner, he may expect to have no job the next morning. And that is the least that can happen to him!"

Many Countries Have Been Soviet "Enemies."

The question of consistency has never notably concerned the Kremlin in its dealings with the people, and so far as we could see, its unremitting propagandist program lost in no wise because its direction veered from first one point of the compass to another. Sometimes—early in 1930, for example—it was Poland who was the arch-enemy of the Soviet state. Now Rumania was the bogeyman. Then France was undoubtedly sponsoring sabotage with grimmer motives in mind, as witness the salient testimony developed during the famous trial of the professors early in 1931. England's turn came later. Periodically it devolved upon Japan to be the international villain. In our day, though, the United States was treated with real politeness. As we had not yet recognized the U. S. S. R. there was still something to be gained from us and the good comrades contented themselves with a mere anti-capitalistic caricaturing of Ford, Rockefeller, Hoover, et al.

That these teachings might be properly fortified, a plethora of time, space, and speech was devoted to convincing the workers that their "happy and contented" state was truly to be envied by the suffering millions in other parts of the world. The American motion picture, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," was shown in Baku in the summer of 1930. Certain young Consomols, members of that organization which trains Russian youth for future participation in the Communist Party, came to talk the matter over with me as soon as they had seen the picture. They were aflame with indignation, boiling with a sense of the wrongs of the world.

"How can you even admit that you came from a country where such beastly things are permitted? How we cried—how our mothers cried! Oh, it was horrible when the whip fell upon that poor black man." All this was hurled at me in a breath.

"But, really," I protested mildly, "why be so excited over a story of what might have happened almost a hundred years ago?"

"Almost a hundred years ago? Why, our lecturer at the cinema told us only last night that this was a true picture of conditions in America today."

Nor did they believe a word of it when I told them that there had been no slaveholding in the United States since the end of the War Between the States in 1865. They went away sadly shaking their heads over the tissue of lies they had just heard fabricated by a bourgeois member of society.

One Thought Predominant.

In the propaganda addressed to the peasants and the workers one underlying thought was invariably stressed. Since Soviet Russia has already built a state of "happy and contented workers," the capitalist world would make every effort to crush and overwhelm the militant defender of the proletariat in order to keep its down-trodden wage slaves in hopeless subjugation. Therefore—"Capitalistic foes are daily plotting our destruction . . . We must arm ourselves . . . We must strain every nerve to complete the industrialization of Russia in less than the time allotted by the five-year plan so that we can support ourselves through the war that is coming . . . We must strike before our enemies are ready . . . We must carry the world revolution to the furthermost corners of the earth . . . There can be no revolution without bloodshed . . . There can be no compromise for the dictatorship of the proletariat." Again and again we observed that repetition of a single note—communism's only defense must lie in military aggression.

This scarcely squares with some of Mr. Stalin's statements during his recent interview. Then he declared most unequivocally that if there are those who "believe the people of the Soviet Union have any desire to alter the face of things by force or to change the established order in surrounding states by force, they are entirely mistaken." When the query was put to him directly as to whether the Soviet Union had abandoned its plans and intentions for bringing about the world revolution, he said: "We never had any such plan or intention." When reminded that other countries have long thought otherwise, he remarked that the idea so unfortunately prevalent was a "product of misunderstanding," a misunderstanding which he characterized as tragic, comic, tragi-comic. Revolution must grow out of the "will of the people;" it cannot be exported, he continued, and it is unwarranted to "presume that we want to bring about revolution in other countries by interference with their national life."

A young Communist servant said to an American woman we knew, "Now, Amerikansky engineers, tak sibya—like this," and she indicated possibly 12 inches between her two hands. "Russky engineers, so," and she measured a bare inch. But graphically reversing the dimensions, she continued, "When the Five-Year-Plan is done, Russky engineers, like this; Amerikansky engineres, so. Then we will come to America and," she raised an imaginary gun to her shoulder, taking careful aim, "tchlk! Shoot everyone who isn't a Bolshevik!"

It was all very funny to the Americans, certainly. But this 16-year-old peasant girl of moronic intelligence was in deadly earnest, quoting very literally what she had been told at the meetings of the Young Consomols in the village where she lived. It serves to suggest, possibly, what Russia has done in the way of fostering her younger generation. It also throws some light upon just how Russia considers a revolution should grow "out of the will of the people."

Another incident happening while we were at Baku illustrates a little further the Soviet's reluctance to "export revolution." England was just then greatly exercised over what she did not hesitate to characterize as Russian meddling in her current troubles in India. At Geneva representatives of the U. S. S. R. were grieved beyond measure at such cruel injustice dealt from the hands of a sister power.

"Said the Russian spokseman, in effect, "Does the entire world not realize that our poor country, striving with every effort to lift herself from the mire of former oppression to a certain level of industrial civilization, has neither the time nor the money to throw away on such undercover activities as these of which we are accused? We have no friendly credit in the world market and it tests our every expedient to raise what cash we need to procure the machinery vital to our development. How could we finance riots in other lands? We can scarcely pay the ruinous premiums which are exacted of us because we are so unfortunate as to be a purchasing nation."

Rest of World Had to Explain.

The plaint of credit discrimination was so cleverly injected that the rest of the world, instead of calling Russia to account, suddenly found itself put in a position to do the explaining. But so far as we were concerned, the subtle reversal of grievances in this little passage between diplomats as reported in various European papers was given its particularly amusing point by a speaker from Moscow who appeared at one of the Bakinsky Communist clubrooms about this time. Since Baku, almost upon the Persian border and just across the Caspian from an even more direct route to India, was strategically interested, this representative from party headquarters gave in inspiring detail what purported to be exact statistics on the amount of money and the number of organizers sent into India during the preceding month to foment riot and rebellion against the British rule.

We lived for months beside the army barracks at Baku, waking every morning to the beat of marching feet and to the swinging harmony of martial songs. The Soviet soldier should certainly be immortalized along with the Volga boatman, for how he loves to sing! And how he can sing! I used to wonder just what those songs were all about as I'd hear the squads going by early in the morning and coming back just at twilight. Then someone gave me a song book. Here, in "Songs of Fathers and Older Brothers," is the Internationale that everybody knows. Then there is the March of Budoni, almost equally famous, sounding the prowess of the Red Army, its devotion to the "little brother," Budoni, and its respect for Voroshiloff, "the first Red officer." The Red Banner rings with a call to world conquest and a spirit of revenge. The Fusillading of the Commissars relates the tale of the commissars who were grossly murdered by the enemy and who thereby attained to everlasting glory in the annals of the cause. The Charge of the Bayonets, the Song of the Commune, the popular Warsaw Song, these are some of the others. There is nothing particularly new in an old world—like all martial songs of all time they resound with hero worship, destruction to the enemy, and the magnificent certitude that "our side is always right." That they do possess a vernacular rather more joyfully detailed and specifically bloody must be admitted, however. The Communistic Marseillaise is typical enough:

Grozny Shows Military Spirit.

But after all, Baku was a port, a large and important city, and in any case it would have its local troops. But it was in Grozny, which always seemed to us the sprawling Russian village in spite of its 100,000 population and its adjacent oil fields, that we witnessed the tightening of government resolve to achieve military ascendancy. Again we had an apartment near the barracks and parade grounds where we could watch the constant drilling of new recruits, the movements of men and of guns, all on a scale which at first seemed to us quite incompatible with the facts of a nation at peace. But we understood more fully when we came to realize that this particular section of the U. S. S. R. was not exactly a nation at peace.

When one reads the Soviet press releases that go abroad one must always be impressed by the fact that this single country, comprising one-sixth of the earth's surface, is made up not of one homogeneous people but of a heterogeneity of some hundreds of nationalities and racial groups. Mongols, White Russians, Armenians, Turkomans, Georgians, and what have you—the picture is invariably painted of a contented and voluntary federation whose members have become as one through no coercion other than the reverence inspired by Marx and Lenin and their theories of social justice. The picture can hardly be said to possess photographic accuracy, however.

Take the country of the Caucasus, for instance. Among the high peaks are hundreds of races, or remnants of races, whose mysterious secrets remain shrouded in the dim mists of olden times. They are people of strange languages, strange customs, strange faiths. A few of them may profess to a paganized Christianity, but more of them are devoutly Mohammedan. Impregnable in their rocky strongholds, the political fate of nations has never had significance for them. They live as they have for thousands of years with their wandering herds of sheep and goats, the complicated principles of their mountain codes supplying them with law. Their men are hard-riding warriors who fight one another, neighboring tribes, or outside authority with equal zest, all for the love of battle. Yet, says Essad Bey, writing of these tribes, "These illiterates who go about armed to the teeth, these brutish barbarians, are by no means virgin wax upon which Europe can set its imprint. An ancient culture has held sway over many of these races, and it rules over them still."

It is nothing new that the people of the hills should be at war with the powers of Russian dominion. Grozny is the present capital of the Checken country, and less than a hundred years ago when young Tolstoy was writing his "Cossacks" it was excellent morning sport for a Chechen to go out and bag a Cossack before breakfast. However, an element of more purely personal hatred has lately been introduced into the old relation as an outgrowth of the Communists' determination to control, collectivize and socialize the tribesmen; and the peasants of the steppes, who, dispossessed of their homes and their belongings in the Soviet drive against kulaki, have joined the Abreks, or mountain brigands, to escape the government farms to fan the flame to a brighter blaze.

From all this it follows that there was continual fighting in the Caucasus and that the soldiers at Grozny did not play at war. In the months we lived there scarcely a day passed that a military funeral did not move slowly upon our street to the strains of the Internationale. No automobiles were issued to foreigners except with accompanying chauffeurs who had orders to keep their charges from independent venturing outside the town. The Chechens had an annoying habit of shooting first, then looking to see if they had sniped a Communist. If they had, there was especial cause for rejoicing; if they hadn't, it really didn't matter greatly if the victim wore good boots. There was a tremendous shortage of boots those days in the Soviet Union.

Mountain Fighting Menaces Travelers.

French geologists whom we knew frequently told of bullets ripping through the tops of their cars in spite of the fact that they were always sent out on prospecting trips under guard. Through the "grapevine" by which news is circulated in the U. S. S. R. since the state-controlled press carries only propaganda, we heard of bridges being burned near the town, of detachments of soldiers easily decimated. There was a time—I think that was while we were at Baku—when the famous Georgian Military Highway from Vladikavkaz to Tiflis was closed because the fighting in the mountains was a constant source of danger to casual travelers. The marksmen of the hills are unexcelled and, retreating to their own unassailable passes, they can pick off approaching soldiery one by one. But how they hate the aeroplanes which are somewhat reversing the advantage! They count it another grievance against the Reds who show no manner of sportsmanship in their unethical and cowardly fighting!

Danger Threatens— The Reds Are Told

They Believe the Capitalistic Countries Are a Menace to Their State, Which Must Some Day Be Met.

It is not my purpose to quarrel with Soviet policy. After all, there is nothing new in the attempted subjugation of an untamed people by a "civilized" nation. It has long been considered quite good form in capitalistic countries and the idea is not exactly original with the Communists that such conquest is always for the good of the conquered. "This hurts me, my child, more than it hurts you," but the child never seems greatly impressed by such kindly paternalism. But it is all so much a matter of persuasion, and the Russians ought to have a more evident sense of humor. When England holds dominion over India, it is a clear case of imperialistic oppression. Perhaps it is. But when the USSR goes into the Caucasus, the means justifies the end. Perhaps it does. And of course it is merely coincidental that the fabulous oil fields of Azerbaijan and Chechenia are within the boundaries of the people "persuaded" to accept the liberation of social justice.

Turbulent Conditions Existed in Turkestan.

We were told by Russian travelers just come across the Caspian that Turkestan, whose "voluntary" adoption of the Red Flag brought a most timely addition of invaluable cotton lands to the Moscow government, manifested a turbulence similar to that existing in the Caucasus.

All the world has heard the epic of the construction of the Turk-Sib Railway and the development of the cotton industry under the guiding hand of the Russian dictatorship, but little space has been allotted to the fighting which took place with the ungrateful natives. A Russian acquaintance told me of the three days it took her to make what should normally have been a five or six hours' journey to the sea. The Red guards and the train crew received recurrent attention from ambushed rifles and sections of the track were persistently torn up and burned just ahead of the approaching locomotive.

But the training of the army and of the civil population in Grozny went much further than any mere provision against the rebellious tribesmen of the provinces. In the spring of 1931 we were given a demonstration which indicated that the Kremlin was predicating its policy upon a possibility of wider use and sterner necessity for the military than that created by barbarians who failed to appreciate the benignity of the new regime.

Our first intimation of stirring events to come was when the entire town broke out in an epidemic of gas masks. There were gas masks in the shop windows, inexpensively priced. Men, women and children strolled along the streets with gas-masks in their hands. Various assemblies of the citizenry met upon the parade grounds at the barracks to receive instruction in the delicate art of putting on and taking off gas masks. We were told that every individual in the city was required to be present at some one of these meetings unless he was certified by a physician as being physically unable to do so. Overnight, gas masks had become quite the thing and it seemed odd enough to an American to look out of a window and see dozens of children from toddlers to ten-year-olds playing happily with such toys.

Town Prepares For "Air Raid."

Then one day my husband noticed workmen making arrangements for darkening the windows at the refinery. Inquiry developed that the town was getting ready for an "air raid." The daily papers in heralding the event gave no information as to when it might be expected, however—this was to be very realistic. It was! About 4 o'clock one morning there came a terrific crash, and I struck the floor with a thump just as the second "bomb" landed squarely in the middle of our courtyard. Crash, bang, boom!—the insistent droning of planes overhead—it continued for 40 minutes and though our survival of the bomb in our courtyard went far to assure us that our enemies were only good comrades somewhat prematurely embattled, it was a weird experience.

The next morning the papers congratulated the well-trained populace upon its calmness, poise and good judgment in meeting the exigencies of this dastardly attack by the Whites. Since the early days of the revolution when the White armies of old Russia opposed the progress of the Red soldiers, the "Whites" have remained symbols of implacable enmity to the defenders of the proletariat. However, the congratulations were followed with an announcement that the foes had not been discouraged by their failure in the air and that they might be expected to attack at any time with infantry and guns. In such a crisis the civilians were to go immediately into their houses, close all windows and doors and leave everything to the army.

So when the first shot was fired about 10 p. m., two nights later, the Russians at once took to their houses and the Americans took to the streets! It was most exciting, something like an exaggerated Fourth of July. There was a machine gun on every corner, rat-a-tat-tat! Soldiers were firing rifles up and down the streets, running hither and yon, falling upon their faces as they confronted the enemy charge, having a beautiful time generally as they tossed firecrackers about for hand grenades. Meanwhile, the big guns on the hills behind the city were booming away into the sky, presenting against the horizon a display of "heat lightning" which was grim enough in its implications.

Guerrilla Warfare With Whites.

The next day the press disclosed another huge victory for "our side." But the Whites, it seemed, must have still a third lesson, for immediately following this prolonged seige they made a half-hearted day-time attempt to take the city. But this was only guerilla warfare of a sort and, having given them a thorough trouncing the night before, we easily remained in control of the situation.

But when maneuvers were over it must be said that the participants, civilians, soldiers and foreign onlookers, had all learned something of what war looked like and felt like. In later years other Continental powers have become as effectively war-conscious as one might ever accuse the Soviets of being, but the fact remains that the latter can be credited with about three years' precedent action. Just what it all amounts to in the last analysis no sensible observer would attempt to say. But I doubt if the rest of the world has very definite knowledge of the real strength of Russia's trained forces or the extent of her preparation.

Preparing for the Coming War.

For that matter, her unceasing efforts toward industrialization have been, to her own people at least a Five-Year-Plan for the purpose of the coming war. And industrialization has encompassed certain activities which have not been publicized particularly. We knew from German engineers who were with us at Baku of contracts signed with German firms for the construction of extensive chemical plants near the Baltic Sea, chemical plants peculiarly adaptable to the production of poison gas. Five hundred thousand men, I believe, was the official figure for the army at the time we lived there.

But the army has not always presented a solidarity of sentiment which would make of it a wholly dependable force. The government has attempted to create this spirit of essential loyalty by recognizing the military, along with the secret police, as a privileged class in a "classless" society. The army has never lacked for food even in times of greatest shortage. The army has had clothes, the army has had various necessities and small luxuries unknown for many years to the "favored" proletariate. But, one wonders, how much of loyalty and support has such privilege really assured?

The Kremlin itself seemed to entertain such doubts those several years ago. Though using every resort of war propaganda to fire its own people with a motivating hatred, it showed a reluctance to provoke armed hostilities with other nations. But Stalin's present pronouncement with regard to Japan would indicate that he now sees in his forces the dependable fighting machine he set out to make them. He has had time to prepare, and now he promises war.

And as international affairs seem to move to a crisis, as German forces under another relentless dictatorship move into the Rhineland, as Mussolini pushes into Ethiopia, and as Japan toys with the borders of Mongolia, both the U. S. S. R. and the rest of the world may come shortly to discover in terrible experience just what 19 years of propaganda in Russia have actually accomplished and just what the Red army is really like.

Russian Infantry on Parade

Soldiers of the Soviet army are provided with the most up-to-date equipment, and are given a thorough training for the day when the Red soldiers may be ordered to march against the enemies of the republics.

The people of Russia have been taught to believe they are surrounded by nations against which they must some day fight to defend the cause of Communism. And they expect to be ready for war whenever it may come.

Tokyo Liberals, Confused, May Stage Return

Correspondent Believes Militarism on Wane in Japan.

That root cause of the recent insurrection and of the economic discontent so prevalent in Japan is found in this fact. Most of the men in army in all ranks come from agicultural families, and they seered when they look at wealthy capitalists and industrialists and then turn to the miserable conditions pervailing in their own homes. State socialism seems to them the only way out, and a military government the only way to obtain state socialism.

If, now, Finance Minister Baba is able to readjust the taxation system so that these conditions cease to prevail he will have done more to cure discontent, to curb the power of the militarists than he could accomplish by any other measure. As president of the Land Bank he is thoroughly familiar with agricultural conditions and probably has worked out schemes of his own which he will now endeavor to put into effect.

Matsudaira Important.

Still another factor which proves that the militarist victory is largely a surface victory are the appointments to the non-political posts close to the throne. Tsuneo Matsudaira, who has gone in as minister of the imperial household, is liberal and antimilitarist to the core. He is well known in Washington and London because of his service in those two capitals as Japan's ambassador. He is in a peculiarly strong position because his oldest daughter is married to Prince Chicibu, the brother of the Emperor, and because his wife is probably the closest personal friend of the Empress Dowager. The Empress Dowager is a most remarkable woman, and is a real force in the state when she feels the need to exercise her influence, which is but seldom.

The new Lord Privy Seal is liberal in thought and in action, as is the new president of the Privy Council, Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma. Baron Hiranuma is considered in many quarters to be re-actionary and pro-militarist, but it is a reputation which he does not deserve and is due to the fact that he possesses many friends among the militarists. If his own acts, rather than his friendships, are considered, he falls definitely into the liberal camp.

Liberals Still in Evidence.

It must be remembered that it was primarily to remove liberal statesmen from the positions close to the throne, thus making way for militarists and the ushering in of state socialism, that the handful of junior officers set out on their campaign of assassination. The best proof of the failure of their cause is the personnel of the new appointees and of the fact that the Emperor relied chiefly on Prince Kimmochi Saionji, veteran Genro, in selecting these men. Prince Saionji was one of the men marked down for death but who fortunately escaped.

There has been no sudden and dramatic swing from militarism to liberalism in Japan as a result of the abortive coup d'etat and public repugnance thereto. But when the vantage point of years is gained it may be possible to look back upon that incident as marking the high point in military ascendency and the inauguration of a return to liberal and more democratic government in Japan. That it must be a rather slow and gradual process is probably for the best, and it may well lack spectacular features. A step at a time is safer than a sudden plunge, however, and the Japan of five years from now promises to be a very different Japan from that of today barring, always, the possibility of a foreign war.

Youth Hits War In Quaker City

undisturbed by his threats of "real, honest-to-God, non-partisan debates."

In connection with some of the just mentioned radical and near-radical activities among students, it seems somehow significant that not far from Princeton, at the State capital of New Jersey in Trenton, and on the same day with the report of the organization of the Veterans of Future Wars, the American Legion came through with an expression of opinion that made a number of liberals feel happier about that organization. It was in connection with a bill before the New Jersey Legislature to penalize pupils who refuse to salute the flag.

This bill was reported to have the backing of the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Red Men, the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and the Odd Fellows. Opposing it, along with representatives of the Communist party, the Civil Liberties' Union, and the State Teachers' Association, were representatives of the State Department of the American Legion.

"Speakers for the American Legion," reported the Associated Press, "branded the measure as 'ridiculous and silly' and directed at 'evils which do not exist'."

No doubt there is much in the collection of more or less local incidents reported here that is calculated to produce cerebral hemorrhages among those who like to believe that all American problems were settled once and for all in the latter part of the eighteenth century. They are, nevertheless, news that in the very long run may prove to be of considerable importance.

Trellis Around Door Will Relieve Severity

A simple and inexpensive way to relieve the severe plainness of an uncovered front door is to build a trellis around it. It need not extend over 20 or 24 inches beyond the face of the house. Either a square top or an elliptical top may be used, depending on which would look better on the particular facade to which it is to be added. If it is stoutly built and vines are trained over it, it will make a delightful effect.

The New Microscope "Scales" Makes Dime Weigh Half a Ton

Amazing Instrument, First in the United States, Will Be Able to Weigh Molecules, Other Things Invisible to Eye.

By the Associated Press.

Wilmington, Del., April 4.—A dime weighs 1,025 pounds, or half a ton, in a new ultra-centrifuge, a "weight microscope," the first of its kind in the United States, announced here recently by the Dupont Co.'s science experimental station.

This centrifuge, designed by the Swedish scientist, Dr. The Svedburg, does for weight what a microscope does for size. But where the ordinary microscope multiplies size a few hundred or thousand diameters, this "microscope" multiplies actual weight a quarter of a million fold.

Size does not change. Thus, molecules or small bunches of atoms which can never be seen by a light microscope, become so enormously heavy that scientists can visualize the "parts" of which they are made and tell how they are put together.

Hidden Puzzles.

Many processes of industry and puzzles of medicine and human body structure are at present hidden in this still unknown structure of the sort of "giant" protein molecules which this new "microscope" lays bare for investigation.

The centrifuge resembles the hub of an axle. It is a 20-pound steel disc, 7 inches in diameter, mounted like a hub. It will make safely 60,000 revolutions a minute. At that speed its rim travels 20 miles a minute, or one and a half times the muzzle velocity of a .22-caliber rifle bullet.

At that speed centrifugal force increases the weight of objects placed in a little chamber near the rim of the rotating disc. A pound there, the announcement today states, would weigh 125 tons.

For safety this bit of centrifugal dynamite is housed in 800 pounds of steel, 5 inches thick. It is in an underground laboratory. It is announced as the only kind of centrifuge in which even temperature can be maintained. A vital point in molecular investigation. J. B. Nichols, former student of Svedburg and D. E. O. Kraemer installed the centrifuge.

The only other one, made by Dr. Svedburg at the University of Upsala, Sweden, has rotors as big as this one, which have attained 160,000 revolutions a minute. In them a pound would weight 600 tons. At those high speeds the rotors quickly explode.

Turbines Power It.

The driving mechanism is two turbines, each the diameter of a dime, fixed in the ends of the axle bearing the whirling disc.

Streams of oil, forced at 800 pounds pressure, against the vanes of these turbines turn the axle.

It takes 45 minutes for the centrifuge to attain the 60,000 revolution speed. It takes likewise 45 minutes to slow it down. Stopping it quickly would burn out the bearings.

The hub revolves in a partial vacuum, one-thirtieth as dense as air. A very thin charge of hydrogen in the partial vacuum conducts away the heat produced by friction against the tenuous atmosphere of the chamber.

The revolving disc is not round, but oval. The latter shape is stronger than the round one. These high speeds reveal that a perfectly round disc has points of weakness, parts overlikely to fly off. Theoretically a figure eight is the safest shape disc.

In one end of the oval in a chamber a half an inch deep and a few millimeters in diameter, the substances to be studied are placed in a liquid.

Molecules Separate.

Whirling, the molecular particles, as they acquire weight, begin to separate, the heaviest moving outward toward the rim, the lightest inward toward the center.

Light flashing through this chamber and synchronized with the revolutions, enables a 9-foot long camera to photograph the substances in the flying cell.

Hemoglobin, the red stuff in blood, has been examined in this "microscope." Revealed is the fact that hemoglobin molecules have a molecular weight of more than 68,000 times the weight of a hydrogen atom and that the red blood molecule is one-five-hundredth of an inch in diameter.

Stranger is the revelation that this red molecule is made of definite parts—each one weighing 34,500 times one hydrogen atom. Similar "bricks" of exactly this weight, compose most of the large protein molecules. Thus similar weight bricks form the molecules of silk, wood, paper, rubber, rayon, bakelite, in fact most of the films, plastics and molding materials of industry.

Radio Reaches Golden Jubilee In Year 1936

Patent Office Records Show Edison Had the Idea.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 4.—Radio, or rather wireless as it first was called, in 1936 has reached its golden jubilee. The records of the United States Office will substantiate this statement.

That makes the science considerably older than the generally accepted belief—even a few years before the Marconi developments of the 90's, which, however, were the first to demonstrate some of its future possibilities.

It was Thomas A. Edison, who on October 5, obtained a patent under an application he had filed April 7 the year before for a device described as a "method of electric telegraphing or signaling by induction without the use of wires."

Celebration in Order.

So, a celebration is regarded as in order, and broadcasting is making plans to do so in May. It will have special programs to celebrate the first step in this country toward what later became the modern method of communication. The golden jubilee will be under auspices of the Thomas Alva Edison foundation, of which Owen D. Young is national chairman.

Edison, in his patent application, stated that the transmission scheme was possible only if there was "sufficient elevation to overcome the curvature of the earth's surface and to reduce to a minimum the earth's absorption."

He also claimed: "Collision of ships in fogs can be prevented by this method of signaling, by the use of which, also, the safety of a ship in approachnig a dangerous coast in foggy weather can be assured. In communicating between points on land, poles of great height can be used, or captive balloons. At these elevated points, whether on masts of ships, upon poles, or balloons, condensing surfaces of metal or other conductors of electricity are located (the modern aerial). Each condensing surface is connected with the earth by an electrical conducting wire."

Aerials Displayed.

In drawings accompanying the patent, Edison showed his high-pole aerials on either side of a stream connected to the signaling apparatus, which included a telephone receiver, a telegraph key and batteries.

Later Edison took out two other "radio" patents. He referred to his device as the "grasshopper" telegraph—in after years it was looked upon as the basic radio patent. When Marconi had reached the stage where he had sent the letter "S" across the Atlantic, the inventor sold the patent to the Marconi company for "some cash and quite a little stock."

England Wants Her Own Ocean Air Service Now

She Is Preparing Planes for Great Commercial Routes.

By Oscar Leiding.

London (AP).—Seventeen years after her own John Alcock and Arthur Whitten Brown made the first non-stop flight over the Atlantic, Great Britain is making preparations for her first commercial ocean air service.

Two types of planes, a four-engined, two-decked flying boat and a novel combination of a long-range seaplane and a flying boat to launch it in midair, are being prepared for trial flights in May or June.

One or both of these types will make experimental transatlantic flights this summer to pave the way for the cooperative scheme of the United States, Great Britain, Canada and the Irish Free State for four round-trip flights weekly.

Shannon Terminal Favored.

Picked men, undergoing training at Britain's "air university" at Hamble, will make up the crews and from the west coast of the Irish Free State to the south coast of England civic bodies are pressing claims for their localties to be selected as the European terminal.

Milford Haven, Plymouth, Southampton and Liverpool are among the chief points in England which have been mentioned as possible bases while in Ireland claims have been advanced particularly for Galway and Foynes on the west coast and Cobh on the south coast.

Foynes is highly regarded as a possible base because of its location on the Shannon estuary. The river there is more than eight miles wide, providing ample facilities for seaplanes and flying boats, while adjoining it are large tracts of flat meadow land for use by land planes.

Although the United States has been successful in its conquest of the Pacific and Germany and France maintain regular air services over the South Atlantic, Great Britain is approaching her debut in ocean flying cautiously.

Speed Schedules Needed.

While experimental flights are scheduled for this summer, British air experts consider it will be 1938 before the cooperating countries will be able to maintain a regular service of four round-trips weekly.

A vast amount of work must be done to perfect the necessary ground organization, weather and wind data, besides the technical training of pilots and crews and the building of additional transatlantic aircraft.

A commercial service, British air experts emphazise, must have both speed and regularity.

Speed, they say, would dictate the choice of the route by way of Newfoundland and Ireland. This route, however, would be subject to extreme weather influences. The more southerly route, involving Bermuda and the Azores as stepping stones, would be longer and require greater flying time.

One expert said the choice might be said to lie between bringing London and New York within 48 hours of each other, by the northerly route, or a service taking three days by the Bermuda-Azores route.

With the new British liner "Queen Mary" capable of crossing the Atlantic in four days, the opinion of British air experts is that aviation will have to operate the fastest route.

They hasten to explain, however, that even on a three-day schedule an air service would be advantageous if four round-trips were made weekly, because of the regularity.

"It is not so important these days," one expert said, "for a business man to get a letter quickly from London to New York as it is for him to know that he can get a quick reply."

FHA To Help Build 451 N. Y. City Homes

The mortgages will be financed through the Baldwin National Bank on 20-year terms, the announcement stated.

Mr. Vinal, Miss Chapin To Offer Poetry Recital

Event Set for Wednesday Afternoon at the Phillips Memorial Gallery; Program of Institution Broadened.

Harold Vinal, of New York, author of six books of verse, and Katherine Garrison Chapin (Mrs. Francis Biddle), of Philadelphia, a contributor to his poetry magazine, Voices, will present a poetry recital Wednesday afternoon at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

The poetry program adds literature to the arts which are enjoying the hospitality of the gallery. Beginning with the lectures on art, followed by the Laymen's Musical Courses, the Candlelight Concerts for the benefit of the National Symphony Orchestra, and the recitals by the Washington Composers, the program of the gallery has been steadily broadened through its own activities and those of outside organizations to which it has made its facilities available.

The poetry recital is to be given for the benefit of Voices, a magazine which, since its establishment in 1921, has consistently presented the best in American verse.

Mr. Vinal will read from his latest volume, "Hurricane," and Miss Chapin, author of "Outside the World" and a number of poems published in leading magazines, will read from her work.

The Phillips Memorial Gallery, privately endowed for the benefit of the public and the Nation, is designed as a home for the arts, according to Mr. Duncan C. Phillips, its owner and director. Although it is chiefly devoted to the graphic arts, it welcomes the others. Equally interested in the gallery and its contribution to the artistic life of the Capital is Mrs. Phillips, who is a painter of ability.

Americans on the Continent

By Andre Vulliet.

Paris.

While the winter is gone, the crescendo of tumult and animation at the Gare St. Lazare in Paris each time a boat train pulls in from some channel port is an unquestionable proof that the tourist season is round the corner.

Aside from the usual questioning as to the quality of the crossing and the travelers' Paris first impressions, what one gets on the platforms of St. Lazare station is a charming American atmosphere of gayety and enjoyment of life and the happy good humor of people who have been pent in on the high seas for days and are sort of glad to be set loose on the mainland again.

And it's always amusing to see who was on board and tell our readers that the last time the Europa came in, for instance, we saw Mrs. Henry Ford, Mrs. O. S. Stokowski and her daughter, Sonia, the youthful piano virtuoso; Dr. Carleton Smith, chairman of the American Olympic music committee; H. R. Winthrop, vice president of the Metropolitan Opera; Langbourne M. Williams, jr., president of the Virginia Central Railroad; John Moffat and Miss A. L. Moffat and many others.

With the Grand National Steeplechase on the sports schedule, many international fans were among the passengers on the Cunard White Star liner Berengaria, most enthusiastic of whom were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Johnson, of New York, who proceeded immediately to the Aintree turf classic.

Alongside the horse fans was a group of writers including Adela Rogers St. John, magazine contributor; John Monk Saunders, Hollywood scenarist; Norman Hurst, sports writer; and they often joined for merry-making with the filmland group on board, which included Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and a delegation of the Warner Bros. Films directors, H. M. Warner, Mercyn Leroy and Samuel E. Morris.

To give business men a play, let's add that Edward R. Johnson, president of Rotary International; Sir Douglas Alexander, managing director of the Singer Co.; Craig Biddle, Philadelphia banker, and M. L. Strause, Richmond tobacco exporter, were also on board.

Claude I. Dawson, for the past five years United States Consul General for Spain, whose departure from Spain and official retirement from active service end 25 years of consular service, is the only American ever to have been Ambassador Extraordinary to the Principality of Andorra.

Ordinarily the United States has no representative in the diminutive state, the Consul General in Barcelona having jurisdiction there. In that capacity, however, Mr. Dawson was temporarily raised to the status of Ambassador in 1933 to carry President Roosevelt's respects to the Andorran authorities, perched in their eagle's nest, 6,000 feet up in the Pyranees.

Although his consular service started in 1910, Mr. Dawson's governmental service started back in the Spanish-American War. In the years following he saw service all over the West Indies and Central America. As a consul he represented the United States again in Central America, Mexico and Rio de Janeiro. He was sent to Barcelona in 1930.

Among American benefactors to this country, our friend, Bernard Ragner, who knows more about Americans on the Continent than any man, tells us that we must not forget Baroness Gourgaud, nee Eva Gebbard, of New York.

Thanks to her generosity, the "House of the Emperor," on Aix Island, in the bay of Biscay, where Napoleon spent his final hours on French soil, in July, 1815, has been rescued from ruin and restored into a museum of Bonapartist relics. There is the table upon which Napoleon wrote his moving appeal "for a place at the fireside of the British nation" after his hopes had been shattered at Waterloo.

It was Gen. Gourgaud who carried this letter to the British and shared the emperor's exile at St. Helena. It is his great-grandson, Baron Gourgaud, and his American wife who are today the animating spirits of "the Society of the Friends of the Island of Aix" which has provided the funds, the devotion and the initiative which have permitted this historic "House of Napoleon," where he spent three days, which were perhaps the bitterest of his career, to be preserved for posterity.

Sound Attending Coughs Rarely Assists Diagnosis

Metallic Resonance That Goes With Aneurysm of Aorta Is Readily Detectible; Doctor Discusses the Significance of Vocal Explosiveness.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THERE IS AN OLD SAYING, "There is nothing quite so bad for a cough as coffin." This, no doubt, originated at the time when the symptom was associated with a type of tuberculosis, which was frequently called "galloping consumption."

Most of us cough at some time or other and but little that is positively diagnostic can be based upon the nature of the sounds. On the other hand, the short, metallic resonance associated with aneurysm of the aorta is quite characteristic.

We can readily recognize that "a cough" is not a disease, but is Nature's effort to remove something that is irritating the air passages. This may be a foreign substance such as dust, food, or smoke, or there may be too much secretion interfering with the free passage of air.

There are many persons who have the cough habit. With them it is merely a signal of embarrassment of of nervousness. This is often noted in after-dinner speakers who, on rising, will introduce themselves with a cough. Now and then the man of the house will give a short "bark" as he enters the front door.

Certain habit coughers will thus announce their presence at the theater or in church. No sooner are they seated comfortably than a genteel cough or two proclaims their arrival. This sort is under control of the will. If an expert laryngologist were to examine these habit victims no sign of irritation or obstruction would be found.

Caused by Inflammation.

For the most part coughs arise because of inflammation of the pharnyx, the soft palate (uvula), the tongue, the tonsils, the trachea, or bronchi. When the lungs are affected, as in pleurisy or pneumonia, or because of the presence of tumors, the symptom is nearly always present. It is then an attempt to expel forcibly pus, mucus, etc.

Another typical cough is known as the heart cough, which occurs because of some failure of that organ, sometimes with pressure upon the trachea or upon the vagus nerve (tenth). This is usually a short, low grunt that persists intermittently throughout the day. It is not followed by the raising of sputum. The patient will complain of a constant feeling of irritation. In fact, giving way to the symptom brings a certain amount of relief. In every chronic cough the heart should be examined carefully.

Then there is the cough that comes on whenever peritonitis or some inflammation develops in the abdomen or involves the diaphragm. There is also a tobacco cough due to a persistent low grade inflammation of throat and trachea. As a rule this symptom will subside when the consumption of tobacco is reduced.

Weakening Cough.

One of the most troublesome manifestations of the symptoms is found in elderly persons associated with a deep-seated bronchitis or emphysema of the lungs (dilatation of the air sacs). This type of cough is weakening because it is so continuous. It may leave the patient breathless, with a good deal of air hunger. Any racking cough in the presence of weakness will lower resistance still further, and most physicians will regard the situation with sufficient seriousness to justify the use of some drug which will control the symptom. In children with whooping cough we have the same exhausting situation.

When we were youngsters cough was said to come from two sources—the stomach or the lungs. Stomach coughs are harmless; the other form meant tuberculosis. Of course, the symptom rarely occurs because of stomach irritation, and all too often I am afraid tuberculosis—in those days—was brushed aside as a symptom of indigestion.

Care Suggested.

Whenever anyone who is in ordinary health develops a cough without the usual signs of a cold, particularly if the symptom is persistent in the morning accompanied by a considerable quantity of frothy sputum, careful examination of the lungs should be sought.

Every cough has a cause, whether it be mere habit, a neurosis, or a chronic irritation—and cough medicines are not the answer. At best they cannot remove the cause, even though they may hide the symptoms. It is never wise to cover up disease.

Bedtime Sobs Of Young Girl Due to Fright

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

FOR SOME reason Mary began when she was about eight to cry herself to sleep every night. She did not scream or make any noise, but time and again her mother, passing the child's door or going into her room to see if she was asleep, would find her sobbing as if her heart would break.

Mary could give no reason for her grief, though she often expressed contrition for something she had done during the day. In the morning she would awaken cheerful and merry and be as happy as a lark till bedtime came again.

Cause Varies.

Some children are like this. The cause of their tears varies, and so does the cure. In Mary's case there were several causes. She had once paid a week's visit to an older girl who had described in detail a hell where naughty children went. Mary was a nervous, restless child who, with the best of intentions was always in mischief. She was a trial to everyone and seemed always to deserve a scolding.

She thought of herself as a naughty girl, and as soon as she got into bed in the dark all the day's misdeeds loomed before her, producing an unbearable sense of guilt, and dread of inevitable punishment to come. Her nerves were on edge from frequent scoldings, and her body exhausted from over-activity, so sleep was slow in coming.

Some Feel Guilty.

Many children suffer from an indefinable sense of guilt. They are very apt to be children of the over-stimulated and over-sensitive type. A little quiet before bedtime, a moment or two with father or mother when the day's events can be talked over and put into proper perspective, and above all more sympathy and less nagging, will do much to relieve the child's conscience and let it sleep.

Old Brussels Lace Serves Admirably

Many Surprises Supplied by Review of Latest Fashions.

Draperies Inclined to Be of Pleasingly Simple Designs.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE STEPPED out the other day with a pink suit and violets on our hat—and got rained on pronto, not to mention all the cars that splashed us. So from now on we are going to do our season rushing indoors and take our spring yearnings out on window curtains for our living room and dining room.

Here are some high fashions in curtains that we've noted recently: Real old Brussels lace curtains finished off with a charming draped valance of white and pink striped taffeta that was edged in glass bead fringe. Shown in a room in gray, white and the range of the carnation shades . . . Chartreuse corded draperies with a valance made of long crystal prisms—to repeat a detail of the prism motif in the wallpaper shown in the room . . . Rosy beige satin draperies with diagonal stripes of silver ribbon about an inch wide, put on with milliner's glue; the effect was of a metallic diagonal weave in the material . . . Corded cellanese taffeta draperies in a blue-green lined with shell pink about an inch wide; over this pink edge was sewed a looped cord edging in white. This to repeat the pattern colors in a stunning new wallpaper in the room, the background color of which was soft gray-blue.

Pretty as Gardens.

Lots of the new curtains are as pretty as spring gardens this year. In fact many of them depend on window boxes and bright pots of flowers for their pattern. One beautiful big window that appealed to us recently had draperies of a rough weave yellow fabric against walls of deep blue in a room with modern maple furniture. No glass curtains were used but there was a high shelf that reached across the window and here were placed pots of yellow narcissi to make a pattern for the window.

Another lovely window has dark sheer draperies over Venetian blinds—it's hard to visualize just how airy looking this can be till you've seen it; the draperies are arranged with swags and cascades and no glass curtains. The sill has window boxes with ivy and bright flowers growing perkily of a spring morning.

Navy blue side curtains against white walls, white blinds and a window box of yellow daisies created another effect that set us dreaming of summer days. For a room with powder blue walls, powder blue side draperies made pleated and plain over white ninon glass curtains were dramatized by a big round crystal globe holding brilliant dark red cut flowers . . . this was placed on a low table in front of the window.

But alas and alack, those of us who aren't any good with window flowers can't depend on them for our interior decorations, that's sure. So for us the stores are abloom with chintz blossoms. The room of this type that pleases us most has pale gray walls and windows hung with an apple blossom chintz—white on a bright red ground. The rug in this room is light gray with red wool fringe around it.

Spring fabrics that are more formal than chintz and just as versatile to use for draperies include moire taffetas, cellophanes, petticoat taffetas, sheer dark materials. Informal windows that don't use chintz turn to homespuns, the common cottons such as piques and ginghams, tweed weaves.

Draperies are inclined to be pleasingly simple. Swags are used in classic drapings but the ornate loops and cascades aren't too often seen. Exaggerated fringes aren't used as much as they were, but the narrower types of glass bead and plainer fringes still are to be seen. Contrasting linings are used often for design interest and the range of attractive tie-backs and cornices is wide. Generally however, wooden molding cornices are the most popular finish for the tops of the windows where something besides a fabric draping is desired. When a swag is used, sometimes the pole shows, sometimes it doesn't.

Variation for Folds.

A variation of the usual arrangement of folds is to have the drapery pleated in flat pleats (not box pleats) and made longer than necessary so that the pleats spread out fan like about two or three inches on the floor. Particularly nice with a satin drapery.

The success of making sheer draperies for a more or less formal room depends a lot on the type of fringe that is chosen. The little glass bead finish spoken of above is popular and successful because it has weight enough to hold the drapery gracefully yet it isn't so heavy as to pull out of place—that's an important point in choosing trimmings. Trimmings on your draperies, incidentally, are a lot like trimmings for your dresses—they can add expensive looking decorator touches that make a big difference in the appearance of draperies made at home.

The business of getting draperies made is always a problem. It is an expensive job to have them done by a professional, and a very difficult one for a woman to attempt herself. The one comfort is that good draperies last a long time, can be cleaned and are a constant pleasure. Usually when a woman must make her own draperies, it is a good idea to keep to the simple styles, but a swag can be made at home with care.

Pleasant Homes.

IT'S ALL very well to talk about swags and cascade draperies, but how is a woman to make them herself? That is the perplexing question because most of us can't afford to have them made up. Elizabeth MacRae Boykin's new bulletin takes that question up. Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and it will be sent to you—it's called "How to Make and Hang a Swag Drapery."

Housewives Tell Causes For Fatigue

New York Expert Helps Them to Discover the Remedies.

One Reports Her Worry Makes Her More Tired Than Real Work.

COMMON CAUSES of fatigue and ways to overcome or reduce it were studied by women in three counties of New York State recently with the help of the State Home Management specialist. These women discovered a good many reasons for fatigue in their housekeeping routine.

Some were complete surprises to housewives. For example, one found that worry made her more exhausted than any amount of work—worry and also a feeling of pressure or confusion. Having the house in order, and doing things according to a definite plan, reduced this fatigue item considerably.

Several other tired homemakers discovered that they weren't allowing themselves enough sleep at night. Some members of the group got tired easily because they were working in a poor light or without good ventilation. Some reported that uncomfortable clothing, such as tight bands, poorly fitted girdles, and run-down or wrong-type shoes for work were responsible for that tired feeling long before the end of the day.

Exercise Lacking.

Still other housewives found that their trouble was too little outdoor exercise and sunshine. Bad posture was still another forerunner of fatigue. All these women agreed that over-fatigue makes for a good deal of unhappiness, not only for the tired person, but for those around her at home.

Ironing was voted as the most tiring housekeeping job, with washing a close second. Dish-washing got the vote as the most unpleasant daily job. So they set about finding ways to make these tasks easier and pleasanter. Each member studied her own method of work and her own home. One woman who had an exhausted right arm on every ironing day found a remedy for it in a new labor-saving iron rest. Many found that their weariness came from the height of their boards. Some needed raising, and some lowering, to suit the height of the ironer. Sitting down to iron prevented much backache, tired feet and general fatigue.

Rubber Mat Helpful.

A rubber mat relieved those who grew tired at standing jobs like washing or dishwashing. One member had her kitchen window fixed so that it would open from the top for better ventilation. Another changed her plan of work so that all the heavy jobs did not fall on one day but were spread out during the week. Better light over the ironing board, or wash tub or sink made the work easier. Installing the sink at the right height made work easy for one housewife.

THE EASE AND GRACE with which Dolores del Rio (above), attractive motion picture star, enters a room can be acquired by all women. Her entrances are an interesting exhibition of mental and physical charms.

Women Advised to Study Technique of an Entrance

Impressive Arrival in Midst of Party Calls for Check-Up of Posture and Carriage; Several Methods Suggested for Improvement.

By Gertrude Hummer.

THE NEXT TIME YOU GO to a party whether it is for cocktails or tea, formal or informal, do a little beauty observation work. Watch closely the entrances the other women guests make. You will be surprised to find that there are so few women who really know how to enter and leave a room gracefully and with ease.

This observation will start you thinking. You will begin to wonder about your own entrance. And as you, no doubt, are interested in the drive for charm that seems to be uppermost in the modern woman's mind, you will start practicing entrances and exits as soon as you reach home.

Well, that is just what you should do. In fact, it's the reason for this story. But first of all, check up on your posture and carriage. For no matter how young and beautiful you are, if you don't carry yourself well, you won't be able to make an impressing entrance in any gathering. Good posture is the foundation of charm. And the four positions in which you give yourself away are standing, walking, sitting and dancing. Stand tall. Don't let your shoulders and stomach protrude.

Practice Walking.

After you have corrected your posture, practice walking. Acquire rhythm. One way to help you to walk more gracefully is to pretend you are walking on one line. No matter how much you weigh, keep this idea in your mind. You wlil find you will have better body control and you will unconsciously walk more lightly and gracefully.

To gain poise and rhythm when entering a room, stand in the doorway a second and take in the group before you. Make a mental note of where the host and hostess are standing or sitting and the guests you already know. While you are making this mental survey stand tall and straight with your chest and head up and stomach in.

Then walk to your chair unhurriedly and sit down with grace and ease.

Study the movements of your favorite actor or actress if you want to learn a lot about easy, quiet motion. You will notice that the first walking move they make is to lift the thigh, with the knee so limber that it immediately swings the leg forward into flowing, easy step, and the gracefully balanced upper body is drawn along so smoothly that you are barely conscious of its being in motion at all. All of their movements are leisurely, unhurried and naturally graceful.

Way to Sit Down.

Now a few pointers on the correct way to sit down. Never sit down with a bang. It shows lack of control. Sit down in such a manner that the entire seat of your chair is occupied by your thighs with your back resting easily against the back of the chair. Your knees should be close togeher, never spread apart. Your feet should rest side by side a few inches in front of the chair. Your hands will take care of themselves if you are absolutely unconscious of them.

Boarding and finishing schools would do well to include a course in the proper way to enter and leave a room and how to sit down. In the olden days schools made it a point to give instructions along this line. Particularly those of the South. Think what an advantage it is for the young girl who knows how to stand, sit and move about with ease and grace. But don't despair, for no matter how old you are you can acquire poise and grace.

When you feel tense, nervous or self-conscious so that you are not at ease or do not express yourself well, consciously slow down your thinking and talking. Breathe deeply for several slow-measured breaths to relax. Then organize your thoughts and talk slowly. This advice applies to walking as well. When you find yourself hurrying along with nary a thought to your posture, slow down and straighten up.

Remember that you should stand and walk with your weight on the balls of your feet. Also that you should stand tall as though a cord attached to the ceiling constantly is pulling your head and neck upward out of your shoulders and stretching your backbone.

POEMS

Out of the Past

Song.

Earl March looked on his dying child,
And, smit with grief to view her—
The youth, he cried, whom I exiled
Shall be restored to woo her.

She's at the window many an hour
His coming to discover;
And he looked up to Ellen's bower
And she looked on her lover.

But ah! so pale, he knew her not,
Though her smile on him was dwelling!
And I am then forgot—forgot?
It broke the heart of Ellen.

In vain he weeps, in vain he sighs,
Her cheek is cold as ashes;
Nor love's own kiss shall wake those eyes
To lift their silken lashes.

—Thomas Campbell (1777-1844).

Making Marshmallow Easter Bunnies Great Fun

REGARDLESS of how they turn out, these rabbits are fun to make, and because they are made of plump, snowy marshmallows, the young creator may eat his failures.

Is Most Satisfactory of Any Home-Made for Youngsters.

By Dorothea Duncan.

EASTER would be a sorry affair for every youngster if there where no brightly colored eggs hiding in remote, green, straw-filled baskets jealously guarded by fluffy Easter rabbits. The thrill of hunting for Easter eggs will last even after a youngster gives up his faith in the Easter rabbit.

Of all the kinds of Easter bunnies which can be made at home those fashioned from large, fluffy marshmallows are perhaps the most satisfactory from the youngsters' point of view, for they are original, they appear to be natural and lifelike, and, best of all, they can be eaten.

Before trying to make marshmallow bunnies, assemble all properties and review a few rules. Have on hand the following: (1) A pair of sharp-pointed scissors with rather long blades, (2) a cup of cold water, (3) a towel, (4) a box of toothpicks, (5) a saucer filled with cornstarch, (6) an assortment of gum drops and jelly sticks and (7) plenty of fresh marshmallows.

Then, remember that the most important general rules to follow in making marshmallow bunnies are these: (1) Dip scissors into the cold water frequently to prevent them from becoming sticky, (2) dip fingers in cornstarch when they become the least bit sticky, (3) dampen toothpicks with water before inserting them into the marshmallow, otherwise they will not hold, and (4) if toothpicks are too long, cut them in suitable pieces so that they will not protrude from the marshmallows.

One general rule for making the standing bunny in the accompanying picture will give you the main idea of how to proceed, and after you have made one rabbit you can easily work out the rabbits in other postures. You might even make a rabbit of your own design.

Hold the marshmallow by the flat sides in the left hand. To make the head, begin cutting at the upper right hand corner, and cut around the top until the upper part of the head is rounded. Snip a nose and then cut under the chin. When the head is shaped dust it with cornstarch and set it aside.

Then, to make the body, place two marshmallows together, (rounded sides touching) with two dampened toothpicks. Split a long jelly stick and snip off two small ends for the arms. Insert a toothpick in each arm, and break off if too long. Then attach arms (by means of the inserted toothpicks) to the flat sides of the upper marshmallow. The hips are made by first cutting a marshmallow in half, across the flat side. Then cut a small slice from the cut side of the marshmallow in a slanting position. Discard this small slice and press cut side of hips against side of lower marshmallow (the freshly cut edge will stick to the marshmallow without the use of toothpicks). Then cut a small tail and attach it in the same manner.

The lower paws come next. Cut

a jelly strip in half, lengthwise and crosswise; then insert a toothpick in the end of each of two strips. Next attach the paws to the hips.

The bunny is almost finished now—all but giving him his head and some ears. Before placing the head on the body, make slits for the eyes with a wet toothpick. Cut small diamond-shaped pieces from a gumdrop and place in holes made by the wet toothpick.

The ears come next and they are the most fun of all! To make them, cut sections diagonally across the top of a marshmallow. When cut, they really look like ears; however, remember to dust a little cornstarch on the cut edges lest they stick to your fingers and get out of shape. Insert a toothpick in the end of each ear and invert the other end of the toothpick in the spot where bunny's ears usually go.

Last of all, attach the head to the "shoulders" with two wet toothpicks.

A GROUP of suits that speak for themselves. Here you have almost every type from the loose boxy jacket to the tunic-like coat and matching skirt, from the sportsy three-piece to the dressy two-piece. If you're in the market for a really chic suit then what about any one of these?

3-Piece Suit Always Gets Neat Niche

Much in Favor for It Meets Needs of the Practical.

Flower Corsages Are Much in Evidence as Decorations.

By Frances Mangum.
The Post Fashion Editor.

AT FIRST it seemed that this season's style picture was going to be dominated by mannish suits. However, as the spring progresses we find more and more interest manifested in suits with feminine touches. We also find that Shanel's loose boxy jackets, Schiaparelli's tunics, and Molyneaux's boleros are exerting their influence to such an extent that many suits follow these designs in silhouette.

• • • •

After all, women will carry the mannish styles just so far and then they cannot resist a scalloped lapel, a bit of flare, a touch of fur, or a row of crystal buttons to feminize their costume. Proof? Why, look at the suits on this page! They're every inch suits, in the best tailored manner, but note the little details that separate them from the masculine mode.

• • • •

It is such suits—suits with charm, suits that flatter, suits adapted to all occasions—that have sprung headlong into favor. The three-piece suit always has its niche. It's practical. It is for cool and cooler days, two costumes in one. Take a suit with a short, perky jacket, and an abundance of fur, it may be worn for street, for sports, and often when an afternoon dress would be worn instead. And then the suit with the three-quarter length boxy jacket. It's always flattering to the tall women, gives an air of distinction and, depending on the material and trim, may fit any time of day, any occasion.

• • • •

As for colors, this season has seen suits in all colors ranging from a tawny mustard to a vivid green or red. Suits in rough, coarse fabrics, in soft and sheeny materials. In plain tones and striking mixtures. And, oh the effects from accessories alone!

Hats and scarfs in matching shades to contrast with the suit. Coats one color, skirts another. Belts and buttons in bright colors, gloves and bags—and even shoes—to give their colorful touch.

It is a season when bright and colorful suits speak for themselves. And a season when gay accessories speak for staid dark suits.

• • • •

Among the newest details to enliven suits this season are: Flower corsages and boutonnieres in profusion, flower clip buckles and buttons (after the manner of Schiaparelli, and Alix), zipper fastenings on skirts, pockets and fronts, transparent belts and buttons.

Brides of June Here Prefer Tailored Mode

By Pattie Ellicott.

ALTHOUGH they will not reveal the details of their wedding costumes in advance it has been learned that several of the June brides in Washington are planning tailored wedding gowns. One of them is to be of white moire impeccably tailored. The dress has long, tailored sleeves and a slight train, and open, tailored collar. Of course, the regulation wedding veil cannot be worn with this type of white tulle with a short veil.

Mrs. Roosevelt has been busy shopping for summer and spring clothes recently to add to the two new dresses of flowered chiffon which she displayed at a recent press conference. One of the chief features of her Easter wardrobe will be blouses and sweaters to wear with her new tailored skirt of a soft shade of medium blue homespun. This is to be made very plain as Mrs. Roosevelt's skirts always are.

Tailored Coat, Too.

To go with this Mrs. Roosevelt has a tailored coat long enough to be worn as a separate wrap. This coat also goes well with her flowered chiffon and crepe de chene spring dresses. The hat selected to wear with the coat and skirt will also look well with the flowered chiffon and crepe de chene dresses. It is of soft blue material with a medium shallow crown, and brim wider in the front than in the back and sides. It has a veil which hangs down about an inch all the way around.

Cor. Cordell Hunn, wife of the Secretary of State, also has a blue ensemble for spring. Hers is of a smooth silk and wool material and is made with a short coat and skirt and a long swagger coat. With this Mrs. Hull years a blue hat.

Mrs. Thomas Wadden for a recent afternoon party had on a dress of white wool with a short tailored coat of the same material. With this she wore a silk scarf of Alice blue and a white hat with a blue band. To complete the blue and white springlike picture, Mrs. Wadden wore a boutinniere of blue flowers.

In Brown Silks.

Mrs. Dennis Chavez appeared at one of the recent luncheons in a spring dress of beige and brown figured silk. With this she wore a brown spring hat trimmed with a tiny nosegay of flowers.

Mrs. Harry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, is wearing a suit of dark blue silk and wool material. This is made with a tailored dress and a short cape worn oer a hip-length, fitted coat. With this she wears an apricot chiffon blouse with a frill in front. With this Mrs. Wallace wears a sailor hat of dark blue silk banded in straw.

Well Bred Person Yields Point in Game Cheerfully

Finding Fault With Another's Playing or Offering Hints of Instructions Violates Basic Requisites of Good Form in Sports Life.

By Margaret Wallace.

MUCH OF OUR SOCIAL LIFE at this time of year is centered about out-of-door sports and events. Bridge and such games are all-year-round occupations of certain groups.

The rules of good form and courtesy must be strictly adhered to in sports and games, no matter how intense the contest may become. In no other relation with other people is the true character so easily betrayed as in games of chance and sports. There is no basic principle better than an inherent sportsman's point of view and good breeding.

It is an unforgivable social error to find fault with another person because he does not play well. If he shows a desire for instruction, then and then only should he be instructed. It is quite proper to decline an invitation to play games or engage in sports with individuals. The exception is when you are a guest at a party and the hostess has made arrangements for games.

Cheerfuly Yielding.

The well-bred person engaged in a game of chance or sport for pleasure is always willing to yield a point cheerfuly. It is very rude to become so engrossed in your own game that you forget the rights and privileges of others.

It is quite proper for a hostess to ask a guest if she plays well. It is also proper for the hostess to arrange the games so the people with like ability will play together.

If the hostess does not arrange the games, the guests can with propriety choose their own partners and groups.

If the hostess has arranged refreshments, do not hesitate to leave the game when requested. It is embarrassing for a hostess to find that her guests are all too engrossed to partake of the buffet supper or tea she has provided.

Questions Answered.

Query.—I have been invited to an estate near Washington to play tennis and for tea. What should I wear?

Answer.—You may wear your regular street clothes and take your tennis clothes with you. Or you may wear a simple tennis dress under a sport coat and carry your tennis shoes with you. The hostess will, of course, provide you with a room in which to change.

Query.—My mother has asked some friends to come to a buffet supper and to play bridge. I am 20 years old and have been in school. I do not play bridge very well. My mother's friends are all good players. I would like to ask some friends of mine in to play mah jong while my mother's friends play bridge. Do you think this will be correct?

Answer.—It will be quite correct. Your mother's friends would prefer no doubt, to play with good players. Bridge players like to concentrate, so it might be a good idea to have the mah jong game in another room.

Query.—My husband is not home except on Sunday nights for dinner. Is it proper to give dinners on Sunday night? I mean an informal dinner. What kind of clothes does a hostess at a Sunday night informal dinner wear?

Answer.—It is quite proper to give a Sunday night dinner. The hostess should wear a dinner dress with a long skirt and long sleeves.

Query—We have received an invitation to the wedding of a neighbor in our home town in a Western State. We will not be able to attend and have sent our regrets and a present. My husband wishes to send a telegram to be delivered the day of the wedding. Will this form of sending congratulations be correct?

Answer—It is quite correct to telegraph congratulations since you cannot be present to extend them in person.

Query—Do you write the entire name out when writing place cards for a dinner. I have a number of ranking guests.

Answer—The names of high ranking officials are never written out. You should write "The Vice President," "The Attorney General," "The Secretary of Labor," The "Secretary of the Treasury," and so forth. You must write the surnames of Senators and other officials of which there are more than one of the same designation. You write "The Ambassador of France," "The Minster of Switzerland" but you should write the name of a member of an embassy or legation staff.

Query—My employer has invited me to Christmas dinner. He has a wife and delivered the invitation from her verbally. I said that I would be very happy to telephone his wife and tell her that I would be glad to come. My fellow employes said I should have accepted to him and said nothing about his wife. When I said "Shall I telephone your wife and tell her how happy I will be to accept" he answered "Yes, that is a very good idea."

Answer—You were correct. You could not go to any lady's house unless it was directly understood by her that you were coming.

Query—I am a guest in a Washington household. I wish to give a luncheon in a downtown hotel. Will it be necessary to invite my hostess. The friends I am inviting to the luncheon do not know her. The luncheon is to be a formal one with the wife of an official from my home State as the guest of honor.

Answer—it would be very rude to give a formal luncheon and not invite the hostess of the household in which you are a guest.

Navy Blue Wins Great Popularity As Spring Color

Blue—especially navy—is the predominating color in the Easter Fashion Parade now going on in Rockefeller Center. It is shown in formal and informal costumes from morning to night—in suits, coats, frocks and even pajamas. There's particular emphasis on blue as an important evening fashion. Blue is present in numerous copies of Schiaparelli, Vionnet, Mainbocher, Lanvin, and Molyneux, featuring peplums, yokes, pleats, tunics, and petticoats and squared shoulders. Great stress is laid on jacket dresses, and also bright and contrasting accessories.

Black costumes are next after the navy blues in importance.

Widespread Collar Continuing Favorite Choice in Men's Shirts

THAT WIDESPREAD COLLAR continues among the leaders in men's shirt styles. The King still retains his preference for it, along with the large-knot tie, and the great spread of recent photographs of him will undoubtedly accelerate a wider and wider acceptance of the fashion. Which is a good thing, for this style collar is well suited to particular types of faces—the long, thin face, such as Edward's or George's, whose length and thinness ought not be accentuated by too long or too much collar.

But the soft button-down collar also avoids harsh lines that would tend to overstress the angular features of a face. The widespread collar, of course, is also seen in the button-down model. The original button-down, in which the line of the collar rolls softly from neck to button, continues a strong favorite with younger men. It will suit almost any type of face.

The regular collar, that is, with 3-inch points, secured by a collar bar under the tie, is the third leading style for spring. This model is most suitable to the British stripings, those vertical stripes that blend and shade and give wide opportunity for the introduction of color within the limits of sound conservative taste.

strong feature of the new shirts preferred by well-dressed men is checks. Ranging from Scottish tartans to neat small checks, hound's-tooth checks, overchecks, squares, this category offers still another mode of furnishing color to the ensemble without any more gayety or garishness than is required.

Floral Feature Is Emphasized In Subdivision

'Community of Flowers' Dream Is Realized at Kenwood.

Kenwood will soon be a corner of "The Land of the Rising Sun," set down in nearby Maryland. To this beautiful residential community of the Kennedy-Chamberlin Development Co. have been bought the fairy petals of Nippon and the myriad cherry blossoms of Kenwood now exceed those of the nationally famous Tidal Basin in Washington.

When the lovely project of Kenwood, comprising 265 acres between Bradley lane and River road, was planned in 1929, the floral feature of the National Capital was given consideration and the operation's more than three miles of paved streets were lined with Japanese cherry trees. The gorgeous fruition of that scheme will soon be revealed, a delight to the eyes of all who live there and pass there.

At every 50-foot interval on one side of the roads, trees of the "yoshino" variety were set to be staggered with a similar planting on the other side, thus effecting a tree at every 25-foot interval on both sides. To afford a pretty contrast to the white blooms of the "yoshinos," "kwansans," "benihigans" and "weepers," pink-flowering varieties of the Japanese trees, were placed on the lawns and park spaces of the subdivision. The result is a cerise glory, the beauty of which exceeds imagination.

Fragile Ivory Arch.

There are more 'yoshinos" in Kenwood than around the Tidal Basin and through the years their flowers will form a fragile ivory arch above each thoroughfare traversing this neighborhood. One big garden is the landscaping objective for Kenwood. Preservation of its natural beauty and its enhancement by landscaping, have this aim in view. The former is being given a great deal of study in plans now being drawn for even further beautification.

A planting program for trees and shrubs has been carried out so that each of these will predominate during its season. The natural wooded tracts that were saved have been augmented with thousands of young trees. To make Kenwood worthy of its subtitle, "a Community of Flowers," its developers arranged an effective planting program providing for a seasonal rotation of flowering plants and trees and affording a delightful continuity.

Floral Procession.

Thus, when the pink, white and yellow of the cherry petals no longer light the drives, the fire of more than 4,000 tulips bursts forth in parked intersections of many of the roadways. They blaze until their red gold flames are quenched by the snow of white-flowered later blooms in a magnificent floral procession from April to November.

Kenwood Golf and Country Club is a part of this development and this year, the developers are planning planting of yoshino cherry, dogwood and other varieties of flowering trees around the building and an elaborate garden planting around the swimming pool.

Residents of Kenwood have become imbued with the spirit of its developers' idea. They are cooperating with them by planting attractive lawns and by landscape gardening. Kenwood has become a locality of stately trees, wooded glades moistened by trickling streams. It is cooled by shady nooks and brightened by wonderful gardens. The great realization of its planners' dream is here—"the Community of Flowers."

Worthy of its splendid setting among the trees of Barnaby Woods, this quaintly different offering, presented by Thomas J. Fisher & Co., Inc., agent, will be certain to meet with instant approval. Distinctive in appearance, a faithful reproduction of a Pennsylvania farmhouse type, it is cheerfully commodious and delightfully appointed.

Among its many outstanding features that will be appreciated are the attractive modern kitchen, first floor laundry and lavatory and large porch, six rooms and two baths, solid, sturdy construction and interesting mural decorations. "Simply charming," is the expression of those who have inspected this delightful new home.

The lot is 80 by 120 feet and well wooded. The rear of the house is quite as attractive as the front. A shaded outdoor living room and a planting plan embracing 275 shrubs carefully selected by an expert landscape architect complete the picture.

The house is open daily and Sundays until 9 p. m. To see it, drive out Connecticut avenue to Nebraska avenue, turn right on Nebraska avenue to Utah avenue and continue on Utah avenue to Barnaby street.

Awards Made In Trade Board Home Contest

Boss and Phelps Win on 2 Residences; Embassy Structure Cited.

The firm of Boss & Phelps received awards in the recent homes and building competition sponsored by the Washington Board of Trade. These were for the residences of Misses Fawcett, at 1804 Hoban road northwest, and Mrs. Joseph Biberstein, at 3323 Reseroir road northwest. Harvey P. Baxter was the architect of these houses and Boss & Phelps, the builders. Harry K. Boss and H. Glenn Phelps are members of the firm of Boss & Phelps. For buildings other than residential structures, the Charles H. Tompkins Co. received awards for a gasoline service station, owned by Bliss Properties, at Second street and Constitution avenue and for the chancery building of the Embassy of Brazil, at 3007 Whitehaven street northwest. Arthur B. Heaton was the architect of the first of these structures and Harry F. Cunningham was architect of the second. Both were constructed by Charles H. Tompkins Co., of which Charles H. Tompkins is president.

BOSS

A. Jasper Moore, sales manager of the Shannon & Luchs Co., was a recent business visitor in New York.

Mrs. Harry S. Grier and Ray Condit are associated with the sales department of the Boss & Phelps office.

H. M. Lloyd is now with the selling staff of William H. Saunders. Co., Inc.

PHELPS

All of the first six homes erected by the D. C. Sanitary Improvement Co. on Jefferson street between Second and Third streets northwest, have been sold. One out of a second group of six, not yet completed, has been sold, and six more are being erected.

Waverly Taylor, a director of the Naitonal Association of Real Estate Boards, has been visiting in Nassau. Guy S. Greene, Detroit, another director of the association, has also been a visitor there.

A real estate association for Missouri was formed at a meeting of realtors of the State, called jointly by its leading real estate boards and held in connection with the South Central region convention of realtors of eight States at Tulsa, Okla. The president of the new State body is Byron A. Shutz, Kansas City, Mo. The Kansas Association of Real Estate Boards held its annual meeting in the Oklahoma city in connection with the regional convention, elected as its new president Robert Campbell, of Wichita.

TOMPKINS.

The Utah Association of Real Estate Boards, at its meeting, voted to ask the Legislature of the State this year for overall limitation by constitutional amendment of the tax rate on real estate.

The Utah Association adopted as ultimate objectives in modernization of that State's tax laws the six proposals advanced by the National Association of Real Estate Boards, which emphasize (1) over-all limitation of the real estate tax rates; (2) spread of school costs to a wider tax base; (3) valuation of real estate for tax purposes primarily on its productivity, or use value. They include also: (4) budget control, (5) control for special assessments, (6) allocation of a fair portion of gas and vehicle taxes to use for city streets as well as for rural highways.

The subject of the next regular monthly meeting of Washington Chapter, American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, to be held Wednesday, April 8, at Sholl's, 1219 G street northwest, is of particularly timely interest since it deals with smoke abatement as well as higher efficiency leading to lower cost of heating with anthracite. Design of improved heating equipment as developed in the Anthracite Institute Laboratory under his direction, will be presented by Allen J. Johnson. The design principles so developed will form a basis for the production of equipment, particularly for home installations, which will likely appear on the market in the near future.

David E. Brasure is rapidly recovering from an attack of influenza.

J. M. Mills, formerly engaged in the real estate business in New York and New Jersey, is now associated with Realty Associates, Inc.

New Scientific Home-Building Program Is Set

'More Satisfactory Way of Living,' to Be Aim of Sponsors.

New York.—As a continuation of an effort launched last year to demonstrate the value of scientifically-planned, up-to-date homes, a large-scale demonstration home-building program for 1936 has been announced by Gerard Swope, of the General Electric Co.

The company itself will build no houses, but will again sponsor a co-operative movement of material and equipment manufacturers, architects, builders and other related groups.

"To encourage the construction of several hundred demonstration homes, which embody the best house-planning thought of the day, serves not only to stimulate activity in producer and consumer goods, that brings to the attention of all home-owners the safer, more economical, more convenient and certainly more satisfactory way of living that technical and scientific advances have made possible," Swope said.

"Last year's home-building program grew out of an architectural competition sponsored during the early spring of 1935, and in which 9,000 architects competed for $21,000 in prizes. The problem was to produce designs for medium-sized houses, planned from the inside out with an eye to convenience and the maximum utilization of modern methods and equipment.

"Homes were then built from these and other designs brought to the attention of the country's builders through local committees in an effort to stimulate interest in what we term 'New American' homes and thereby assist in general industrial recovery. When the first 'New American' home was opened in Marblehead, Mass., it was visited by more than 20,000 people the first day, and by 200,000 before the demonstration period was over. Approximately 5,000,000 persons inspected the 315 demonstration homes built in all parts of the country."

The 1936 demonstration home-building program will also be known as "New American", since the sponsors feel that this term definitely means quality construction, architectural supervision; planning from the inside out to eliminate waste space and movement; scientific lighting, wiring, and air conditioning; modern kitchens in which labor-saving devices have been incorporated in the order of their use-sequence; designs to permit maximum outdoor living if desired; sensible fenestration; and the other concomitants of a well-planned, up-to-date house.

FHA Stabilizes Price of Homes McDonald Says

Standard Mortgage Practice Praised As Factor in Market.

The elimination of violent price fluctuations in the residential real estate market, consistent with the sounder practices which prevail today in the mortgage lending business are traceable to the operation of the National Housing act, according to Stewart McDonald, Federal Housing Administrator.

That day when a dwelling price was adjusted and readjusted to meet changed selling conditions from day to day probably has passed in most sections of the country, McDonald said.

Standardization of mortgage lending practice contributes as much as any single factor to the establishment of the dwelling as a one-price commodity, Mr. McDonald said—that is, a commodity reasonably priced, the value of which is not premised on the "haggling" or trading ability of buyer or seller.

"Our deeper understanding of the forces that influence real estate today," he said, "keeps us from making the common mistakes of the past. This is not only true of the homes built or sold on the insured single mortgage system of the Federal Housing Administration, but others as well.

"The improved conditions brought about through the National Housing act benefits all real estate. The National Housing act simply serves as the means of standardizing the best ideas and soundest practices in use today.

"This is better understood when it is clear to the individual that the comprehensive system of measuring the risk in mortgage lending under the Federal Housing Administration establishes as it does a valuation on the property that is reasonable.

"Risk rating is for the purpose of determining the degree of risk in each mortgage. Thus if the risk is too great, the mortgage is not insurable under the provisions of the National Housing act. This tends to establish values that are reasonable. Appraisal, as such, is not so important a function in determining the vlue of the property. Risk rating, however, gets to the basic value.

"In a given neighborhood where several of the dwellings are covered by insured mortgages and reasonable values have been established as a result of risk rating, the tendency naturally would be to place a substantially similar value on similar houses located therein. A few years back the price range on similar dwellings in the same neighborhood often was amazing and rarely established any reasonable value on any of the dwellings.

"Thus it follows that in the face of improved conditions today, home buying is a great deal less hazardous than it was. Actually home buying should not be greatly different nor more hazardous than the purchase of any commodity."

Another Westhaven Sale Is Announced

Across the Threshold

By Renee Glasser.

> "God gave man all earth to love,
> But since our hearts are small
> Decreed for each one spot should be > Beloved o'er all—HOME."

Mediaeval history tells us that many years ago William the Conqueror came to the British Isles and changed the entire mode of living for the English people. He brought with him the Norman-French type of architecture, those low rambling colonial-looking villas that to this day adorn the French landscape. The meadows and knolls of England's countryside were a perfect setting for these homes and their popularity and beauty prevail to the present day.

For those travelers and cosmopolites who have gazed longingly at travel pamphlets and posters and dreamed of the possibility of living in one of these picture-book dwellings there is a perfect reproduction right here in the Capital.

Mr. M. B. Swanson, builder, with the help of an imaginative architect, has brought the romance of old Normandy to Washington, and has combined the glamor with practical solid construction. He has placed his picturesque jewel in a background worthy of its charm, in the pleasant section of Forest Hills, at 2842 Chesterfield place, hardly a stone's throw from the outskirts of Rock Creek Park.

Your castle in the air has descended and brought with it every modern convenience imaginable. This perfectly planned eight-room abode is truly a house that is "home" even before it is furnished.

The keynote of its entire floor plan is sunshine and cheer, as it is built with southern exposure, bringing brightness all through the darkest winter months. Every window affords a splendid panorama of this appropriately-named section, forests and hills. Cream colored painted brick against quaint shutters of stained contrasting wood, topped by a sloping gabled roof of variegated slate shingles. Every one varies in size, width and thickness, giving the whole exterior a rustic, thatched appearance. A flagstone walk leads to the hinged wooden door, and once past the threshold, wonders begin to reveal themselves in the unique arrangement of the rooms.

A sunny-looking dining room greets the eye upon entering, leading ahead of the long rectangular hall that stretches across the width of the house. Lofty windows comprise most of the hexagon-shaped back wall of this room, setting off to better advantage the tastefully selected wall paper; ashes of roses brocaded design with a satiny finish over half-paneled white baseboards, blending exquisitely with the pale blue candles in the sparkling crystal chandeliers.

On the right side of the house is the living room, papered in smooth grey stucco-like material, over white wood, offset by a dramatic black and white wood-burning fireplace. Leading off this room to the outside is a concrete-floored side porch.

To the extreme left of the hall is a panelled library for the lover of literature and informal repose. A brick fire-place is set into stained wood bookshelves that reach the full length of the wall, topped by a long flat-surface mantle just begging for interesting knick-knacks. Here is a haven for the man of the house; the room actually breathes of fine books, shaded lights, flickering logs and peaceful pipe and slipper hours.

A gaily-papered breakfast room, ideal for feeding the children, is next, and immediately adjoining is a black and white dream of a kitchen that is certain to inspire the best results in culinary art. Gleaming black drain-boards, chromium finished, chromium lined sink, no end of cupboards and cabinets, broom closets, and all electrical cooking, refrigerating and ventilating equipment. Conveniently located, directly across the hall, is a wash room and lavatory, done in the same color scheme as the kitchen, ebony marble and silver figured paper, with white plumbing fixtures.

The most graceful of curved stairways, with carved wrought-iron balustrades and well lighted by a windowed alcove, leads to the upstairs, where further wonders await the eye. Two master bedrooms on either end of the hall, papered in delicate tones of Delphinium blue and lettuce green, have connecting baths of pastel matching tiles, blue and white and green and cream. The green bathroom features the new neo-angle tub, too.

There are two smaller bedrooms in the center, and the other side of the hall has a black and white bathroom for the use of these two rooms. Spacious cedar-lined closets are in every bedroom, with ample shelves for hats and shoes, and a large linen closet is in the hall.

Lighting fixtures of unusually designed crystal, are uniform throughout the second floor. A disappearing stairway easily operated by a pull chain leads to a large store room and attic above. The entire place seems to be dotted with windows; every sleeping chamber is a place to wake up with a smiling amiable outlook. A bird from the neighboring trees is very likely to

Maury-Mohler Presents Home At 2133 R St.

Charm, Refinement Embodied in Delightful, Unique Studio.

Charm and refinement have been embodied in a delightfully unique studio home at 2133 R street northwest, having its initial presentation today by the office of John F. Maury & J. Rupert Mohler, jr., Inc., realtors. It is a prize among this partnership's collection of choicest offerings.

Rising from a cool and graveled terrace and entered by a graceful ascent of pyramided red tiled steps, this artistic house has a vine clad facade resembling that of an old Spanish mission with its dark red brick and black, massive hand-hewn timber door and casement windows.

This atmosphere extends through to a delightful garden in the rear of the dwelling which may be viewed from the large windows at the end of the high vaulted studio. Observed through this charming medium, the trellised walls of the garden with its niched statue present an indescribably beautiful vista.

Mirrored Hallway.

Entering the rugged portal of heavy timber hinged with iron, the way leads through a cool and mirrored hallway flanked by a refreshingly intimate breakfast room and ground floor bedroom to the immense two-story height studio with its skylight and high fireplace of art brick and stairstepped outline topped by candlesticks.

The dark brown of the interior trim contrasts effectively with the dark green fabric of the walls hung with tiger skin and numerous paintings, sketches and objects of art. Antique clocks, bric-a-brac, a grand piano and carved brass wood bin are but a few of the pieces that complete a magnificent ensemble. A large wagon wheel with a light in the hub and rimmed with tiny candles hangs as a bizarre chandelier.

With its dark wood wainscoting, its comfortable settles topped with bookcases, its luxurious divans and cozy love seats, this studio gives out an air of shaded restfulness and soft seclusion, making the place an ideal abode for the musician, the painter, the writer, or the lover of all that is gracious in a place to live.

Stately Stairway.

The beauty of this section of the house is vividly enhanced by a stately ascending from the studio to a mezzanine hall with casement windows giving a view of the entire floor beneath. Off of the mezzanine corridor are a neatly tiled bath and shower and a lovely bedroom, also adaptable as a den.

In the creation of the artistic in this structure, the architect has not forgotten the practical. The kitchen, servants' room and utilities section are conveniently lodged in the commodious basement. The bright light coming through the many windows of this artist's house is transformed into cool, gray, or golden softness by Venetian blinds. Ample closet space is conveniently located.

A long list of impressive transactions have been handled over the desks of the Maury and Mohler partnership. In its files are records telling of the sales of palatial mansions and superb apartments. But in all its splendid program of offerings, none is more inviting than this house with a soul that is opened today.

Cellar, Former Spider's Home, Now Decorated

Light-Tinted Walls Favored to Alter Atmosphere of Gloom.

By Lynn Hardesty.

New York, N. Y.—Many new and ingenious ideas for decorating the cellar are being seen this spring in metropolitan suburban homes and even in Manhattan, where there are more of the smaller type houses than one would imagine. Dusty spaces, once dedicated to coal and spiders, are blossoming forth under the magic of cleanliness, partitions and paint as hobby rooms, gymnasiums, card and pingpong rooms, clotheries and children's play rooms.

Some of these ideas are set forth in an interesting exhibition of miniature basements constructed by students of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts. Thirty-six of these, cleverly decorated, have just been shown to the New York public prior to a tour of the principal cities of the country. Supplementing the tiny rooms are "before" photographs, floor plans of actual basements and budgets of renovation costs.

White or very light tinted walls are favored most for the basement rooms because they help to make them seem bright and cheerful. For the trim, such colors as "electric" blue, lacquer red and spring green are effective. Floors painted terra cotta, gray, dark green or brown are practical as well as pleasing to the eye.

It is really astonishing what transformations can be accomplished with a little effort and ingenuity. One dusty and unkempt cellar was turned into a rainy day play room for children with a gaily painted sand box, a swing and a small slide. Walls of bright yellow brought artificial sunlight into the interior.

Another room took the older boys into account and was equipped with a work bench, cupboards for baseball bats, hockey sticks and other athletic equipment. A study nook was added, with a desk and built-in settee.

For the devotee of the "daily dozen," a cellar gymnasium will prove a joy and delight. For the man who makes model ships or aeroplanes in his spart time, a convenient hobby room can be made.

Building Workers Save, Avoid Relief

Buffalo, N. Y.—A contractor who employed 20 men last summer reported to the local office of the Federal Housing Administration that of this number only one had been forced to go on relief rolls this winter.

He explained that by agreement with the men he took from $10 to $30 a week from their pay roll and placed it in the bank for them, keeping the pass books at the office.

When the usual winter slackening of construction forced him to let these men go, they were able to come to the office regularly and draw on their savings. This has provided them with a small income until the spring building and modernization campaign is again furnishing them with employment.

Walls Must Be Scrubbed Prior to Whitewashing

The spring fever of cleaning with which nearly every household is affected at this time of year extend, usually, from cellar to attic. Mops and dustcloths fly and the swish of the paint brush resounds.

When cleaning the cellar, be sure that the walls are thoroughly scrubbed before appplying a fresh coat of whitewash. Painting and whitewashing may be done under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Colonial House In Kalmia Road Realty Offer

Shepherd Park Structure Has 7 Rooms With Paneled Library.

Another presentation by the office of William M. Throckmorton, realtor, is a new corner house at 1401 Kalmia road northwest, described as one of the outstanding values of the year.

It is a beautiful Colonial type house of center hall plan situated on a large lot and containing seven rooms. It also has an attractive library paneled in knotty pine; two baths and a first floor lavatory. The library on the second floor can be used as a fourth bedroom, if desired.

Located in the lovely Shepherd Park section, the house is one of group of four, two of which have been sold. The exhibit house may be seen by going out Sixteenth street northwest to Kalmia road and turning east one block.

This presentation is an "electric kitchen health home". It is of brick construction with slate roof and has furred walls, copper downspouting and flashing. It is near Marjorie Webster School, Rock Creek Park and Rock Creek Park Estates.

This house will be open daily and Sunday until 9 p. m. An inspection of 1405 Kalmia road northwest, just completed, is also invited by the Throckmorton office.

It is rapidly becoming an old American custom to start the day with a shower. The house that does not have one is being looked at askance by prospective renters and buyers.

Seldom has a home showing attracted such widespread attention as that of the model group in Homeland, new restricted community of detached homes, presented by the Cafritz Construction Co.

Directing special attention to the group and the community is a new exhibit house at 4433 Brandywine street northwest. This display dwelling, an "electric kitchen health home," is a charming detached structure of Cape Cod type and simple yet dignified architectural treatment. It is furnished and draped by Hilda Miller.

Its pleasant and substantial brick exterior and slate roof contrast with its artistic white trim and give it an ensemble of freshness and hospitality characteristic of this new community. The house is set on a deep terraced and landscaped lot, with 50-foot frontage, attractively planted with evergreens, flowering shrubs and trees. Its entire atmosphere is restful and admirable.

The living room is amply proportioned and has an attractive brick fireplace. Both living room and dining room are large and well lighted. The kitchen is electrically equipped with the lastest conveniences compactly assembled for efficient work.

The broad basement, with oil burner, offers space for all the required activities making a home truly desirable and comprising laundry and heating facilities and built-in garage with overhead doors. A stairway leads to the upper floor, where there are large and healthful bedrooms and one choice bath. Many closets abound and on the lower floor is a service hall connecting with two spacious bedrooms and tiled bath.

In this Post sponsored group are several handsome structures of English colonial type, featuring brick, stone and hand-hewn timber construction. They are characterized by arched foyers, studio living rooms of rough timber trim, steel casement and diamond-paned windows and cozy window seats, producing the true baronial settings of an old English country house, made doubly acceptable by the most modern living accessories.

All of the homes in this group represent the latest in appointments, the most substantial construction and beautiful design. All have spacious yards and desirable surroundings.

Building Is Begun At Niagara Falls

Niagara Falls, N. Y.—Construction has begun on the first two houses in the new residential development in the Echota section of this city. Plans call for the erection of 60 modern homes, to be sold under the single mortgage system of the Federal Housing Administration.

The houses are being erected by the Walter S. Johnson Building Co. on property owned by the Niagara Falls Power Co. They will be offered for sale under a mortgage arrangement with the Niagara County Savings Bank, which is an approved mortgage under the terms of the National Housing Act.

The houses, which will sell for about $4,200 each, without garage, will be covered by mortgages of approximately $3,300 each. Under the Mutual Mortgage Insurance System, these will be retired over a 20-year period, with monthly payments amounting to about $33, which will cover a share of the principal, taxes, interest, and all other charges.

New Offerings In Wilson Park Attract Many

Realty Associates Showing Another Selection of Bungalow Values.

Many persons are visiting the new bungalows being shown by Realty Associates, Inc.

These houses are located at 508, 512, 516, 520 and 524 LeBaum street southeast, in Wilson Park, Congress Heights, and are featured by an exhibit residence at 508 LeBaum street. The presentations mark the second step in a successful operation, the first group of ten bungalows having been quickly sold.

To visit these home values, drive out Pennsylvania avenue southeast to Eleventh street, turn right on Eleventh street through Nichols avenue to Mellon street; right one square to Fifth street and right one square to the properties. They are priced at $5,850 and $5,950 and may be acquired on reasonable terms.

These offerings are of all-brick construction with roomy basements. Their equipment includes hot-water heat, automatic storage tanks, Oxford kitchen cabinets, inlaid linoleum, hardwood flooring and insulated ranges. Some of them have front porches and all are located on terraced and landscaped lawns.

An inspection of the display structure will at once impress the visitor with the spaciousness and light for this type of domicile. There is a large and comfortable living room with hospitable brick wood-burning fireplace in one corner; a well-lighted dining room and neat and cheerful kitchen with all equipment and work space conveniently assembled. The appointments also include an electric refrigerator.

Two convenient bedrooms and bath with standard fixtures and in black and white tile, complete the first floor plan and a stairway from the kitchen leads to a commodious basement with ample space for laundry and heating facilities.

There is a large attic that can be used for storage and general utility service. The residences are completely screened and have brass fixtures.

The location of these homes is a high and cool one and affords a lovely vista of stately shaded trees. It is close to schools and only a block from regular transportation.

Many Enter in Name Contest, D. A. Sills Says

Real Estate Man Offers $50 Prize for Title for Development.

The response to David A. Sills' name contest for his new development has been so enthusiastic that he contemplates immediate erection of 20 homes there. Mr. Sills, real estate man, is offering $50 for a name for a new development of miniature estates on the Marlboro pike, just across the District line in Maryland. Mr. Sills wants a name that is different and distinctive and one that will not be easily confused with other developments in this region.

He suggests that contestants drive out today and inspect the beautiful tract and see why his office is willing to spend $50 for a name for it. Representatives of his office state that the operation is destined to be one of the outstanding close-in subdivisions in greater Washington. It contains large lots, 100 by 100 feet, that are priced as low as $500 and on very easy terms.

The name contest is open to everyone and all entries must be in the developers' office at the close of business April 8. The winner will be presented with a check on April 12. It is announced that "there are no strings to this offer."

Contestants simply select what they think are suitable names for the subdivision. They bring their selections, together with copies of the advertisement announcing the contest and letters not exceeding 50 words, describing the reason for the selection, to the office of the developers on the tract.

Paint Ceiling White.

Painting the ceiling in pastel colors gives a pleasing contrast, even when side walls are very light hues. To obtain the greatest reflection value from a ceiling, however, it should be painted a flat white.

FHA Lends No Money, Merely Insures Loans

The Federal Housing Administration lends no money. Under the modernization credit plan, the Federal Housing Administration insures private lending institutions against all loss, provided that the total of such loss does not exceed 20 per cent of the total volume of such credit advanced by each institution. In most cases no collateral is required of borrowers when the loan is not in excess of $2,000. Full particulars may be obtained at any Housing Administration insuring office.

Permanesque Homes Village Is Progressing

Rapidly Expanding Unit Located in Nearby Virginia.

Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., attractive suburban community in nearby Virginia, is now progressing successfully on the second year of its history. This rapidly expanding project is located at Beverly Hills, near Alexandria. Its second model home of the new year is now on exhibition there.

The exhibit dwelling, described as "A Home as Modern as Tomorrow," will be open today and daily until 9 p. m. This house and the beautiful community it directs attention to may be seen by driving over Arlington Memorial Bridge to Arlington Memorial. Here, one takes the road to the left and continues on past the Little Tea House on South Arlington Ridge road, or Mount Vernon avenue, along the ridge to Russell road, then turns right. Beverly Hills entrance is only a few hundred feet beyond.

This new "American carefree home" is featured by a cocktail lounge in the kitchen with knotty pine mantel; oil heat, electric kitchen with fireplace, American laundry room, dining room, three bedrooms, two complete baths, one bedroom on first floor, casement windows, concealed radiation, built-in bookcases, knotty pine kitchen cabinets, huge fireplace in large living room, built-in cupboard in dining room, all-brick construction, rear living porch and slate tile roof. The home screened, copper-guttered, weatherstripped, has a built-in garage and is located on an unusually large 90-foot lot.

Permanesque homes represent outstanding achievements of the past years. They are moderate in cost, have structural solidity and permanence, and their design and finish is strictly residential. These homes, built of the finest materials available, are some of the most interesting sights Greater Washington affords.

They are described as "New American Homes," built throughout like modern apartment hotels and equipped with the same modern conveniences. Representatives of the corporation explain that after one buys a Permanesque home there are no "extras" to burden one.

Their electrical equipment includes refrigerator, stove and pastry mixer; other equipment consists of concealed copper radiators, automatic hot-water heat and constant hot-water supply, natural stone fireplace, all-tile bathroom, Reynolds Ecod alumnium foiled insulation, electrical fixtures and outlets. Their external improvements represent grading, landscaping and driveways.

In the rolling, wooded areas of Beverly Hills are 10 miles of bridle paths. Prospective home buyers are invited to come to Beverly Hills and from their first impression of Permanesque's new type, low-priced dwellings. Designs are not fixed, but are constantly changed and bettered on drafting board and in the laboratory. The corporation maintains its own laboratory to test all materials and products before they are specified for the project.

O'Hara Office Given Agency for Land Deal

Walter O'Hara & Son, who specialize in nearby Virginia properties, with offices at Lee Boulevard, Barcroft, were recently awarded the exclusive agency for Greenway Downs, section 5.

The subdivision, on a high elevation and with nice surroundings, is located on the cross-country Lee Highway, eight miles from Washington, within the limits of historic Falls Church.

It consists of 130 large lots, 76 having been previously sold, with seven houses built and occupied.

The elder O'Hara, who is a veteran in the brokerage business, with 26 years' experience and successful handling of such subdivisions as Arlington Park, Aurora Hills, Willett Heights and Barcroft, predicts a rapid sale of Greenway Downs due to the spring season, unusual activity in nearby Virginia and the large lots at extremely low prices.

Break In Paint Brush.

A new paint brush should be broken in on the priming coat, never on one of the finishing coats. It should first be dipped in the paint to a depth of 2 or 3 inches and wiped across the edge with a mixing paddle several times to work the paint well into the clean bristles.

Acoustical Rooms Can Be Arty, Too

It is not always possible to combine science and beauty, but the application of sound-deadening treatment to the walls and ceilings of a room need not make it unattractive.

In fact, quite the contrary is true. One of the popular types of acoustical materials is made from mica which is expanded by the application of heat and has an attractive natural color of iridescent golden ecru.

Painting, however, does not lessen the efficiency. Decorative reps or highly ornamental brocades may be applied over other types of acoustical materials. In most cases acoustical application does not limit decoration at all.

FHA Helps Company Maintain a Full Force

Burlington, Vt.—The J. L. Norton Co., local dealers in fuel supplies and equipment, has been able to maintain a full force of employes throughout the winter because of business financed by the Federal Housing Administration's modernization credit plan, according to John L. Norton, president. The winter sales consisted principally of oil burners.

Homes Resist Wear, Flames And Weather

Business Film Shows How Houses Can Be Sturdy And Yet Liveable.

That beautiful homes which defy weather, wear and fire can be built locally at a price to fit a modest pocketbook, and that there is a decided market for such homes, was dramatically portrayed to contractors, builders, architects and real estate men from this territory who saw the new Johns-Manville talking picture, "The 40-Point Home," presented at the Willard Hotel recently.

The picture was brought here by the United Clay Products Co., local distributors of Johns-Manville products, as part of a national plan to stimulate the building trade to increased activity and to demonstrate to its members how they can help to generate a growing demand for new houses, soundly constructed.

The film emphasized the importance of united, co-ordinated action by all branches of the building industry in merchandising their products—finished homes.

It showed how one young builder became convinced that people need new houses, but that they must be assured that the structures are sturdily built, livable, attractive and a sound financial investment before they will have the necessary confidence to buy. He learned from his local banker the details of the new single mortgage type home financing system, inaugurated under the Federal Housing Administration, which allows a purchaser to pay for a house in small monthly installments over a period of time up to 20 years.

The young contractor also found out about the recently developed "triple insulated" principle of construction which protects a house against fire, wear and both winter and summer weather. He built a demonstration house and was immediately successful, securing orders for several more to be built in the same manner. And he marries the banker's daughter.

America's first "triple insulated" house, recently opened in New Rochelle, N. Y., was used as the demonstration home in the production.

Windows in Basement May Be Cut in Beams

To build a house with a basement and still have it hug the ground without putting the basement windows in areaways is quite possible. The heads of the windows can be placed up close to the underside of the first floor by framing pockets on the first-floor beams. The windows are thus above grade, but the first floor is above one foot nearer the ground.

'Brown' Home Up to Schedule Despite Rains

Jane and George Learn of Advantages of Rock Wool Insulation.

In spite of rainy weather during the last week, progress on the Jane Brown home has been maintained up to schedule, and the slate roof is about to be laid. This home, being built by Waverly Taylor, Inc., in its Rollingwood development, is being sponsored by The Washington Post as a demonstration of modern design, plan and equipment, through the medium of "Jane Brown" and her fiance, "George Green."

While "Jane" and "George" were visiting their home one day, they noticed workmen carrying huge bundles up into the attic space. They followed to see what could be stored in those bulky packages which were lifted with apparent ease. They found other men rolling open the bundles and depositing the contents, which resembled fluffy cotton, between the joists above the ceiling of the second story.

"Now I remember," exclaimed George. "When I talked with the air conditioning engineer about his remarkably low estimate of the cost of heating this house, he told me that the insulating methods used by Waverly Taylor, Inc., was largely responsible for the low cost. This material is called 'rock wool,' and it is put in as an effective barrier against loss of heat during the winter and to prevent the sun's heat from entering in the summer."

Like Eiderdown.

"Why, it's just like covering the ceiling with dozens of eiderdown quilts," Jane observed. "No wonder the model home across the street was so warm and comfortable even on the bitterly cold day we were out here last winter. But what is it, and why is it called 'rock wool?'"

"It's actually limestone," George explained. "It is first heated until it is melted and then a jet of steam is blown across the molten stream as it pours out of a small orifice. The steam resolidifies the rock in fine, long fibers that make up this wooly-looking substance. And of course, being rock, it won't burn or rot, is vermine-proof and everlasting."

"Isn't this going to cost a lot, though?" inquired the economically minded Jane.

"Well, looking at it from the angle of fuel saving, it will pay for itself in a few years and after that it will save us money for as long as we live here," George replied.

To Save 90 Per Cent of Heat.

"I hope you'll pardon me," remarked a man standing nearby, "but I happen to be the insulating contractor and couldn't help overhearing your conversation. It may interest you to know that I read in the American Architect about two years ago that they had figured a saving of 90 per cent of the heat that was lost through an uninsulated ceiling, by using 'rock wool' as we are installing it here."

"That is most interesting," George replied. "I'll have to look up that number. Where else are you installing 'rock wool' insulation here?"

"Wherever there are outside frame walls; for example, on the front of the second floor we put in a blanket, held in place by corrugated cardboard to provide an air space as well, in back of the plaster."

"'Rock wool' cannot be used in brick walls," he continued, "so the best practice is to 'fur' the walls. These wood strips provide an air space of about one inch between the plaster and the inside surface of the wall, which saves about 25 per cent of the heat that would be lost through walls plastered directly on the inside surface."

"Isn't this an insulating board that is being used instead of laths?" asked Jane of one of the workmen.

Wants to See Attic.

"It is called 'Celotex Lath' and it's a mighty good insulator as well as a plaster base," he replied. "I understand that this saves nearly 25 per cent more of the heat that would be lost through even a 'furred' wall, as it is called when air space is left under the plaster."

"I wish I could go up into the attic to see how much storage space we are going to have," Jane remarked. "I almost wish we had insisted on a stairway to the attic, it would be worth a lot to me to be able to go up without having to climb a ladder."

"I've found the answer and it won't mean making any change in the plans or spending a lot of money, either," George answered. "It's the Bessler stairway that can be pulled down when you want it and slides up out of the way when you are through with it."

"Perfect," exclaimed Jane. "I remember now there was one in the model home and it was so inconspicuous I had forgotten it."

Visitors to the model home at 7007 Rolling road or the Jane Brown home at 7010 Rolling road are welcome. To reach, drive out Sixteenth street northwest to Sherrill drive (opposite Walter Reed Hospital), thence to Beach drive and turn right two miles to the sign at Leland street, or drive out Connecticut avenue to East Woodbine street, right to Brookeville road, left to Leland street and right about one-half mile to the "New American Home" sign.

New K Street Building Bids To Be Sought

Office Structure Planned to Replace the Famed Chateau Bonaparte.

Within a week or ten days plans and specifications will be submitted to contractors for bids on a five-story and basement stone, concrete and steel structure projected for construction at 1627 K street northwest. The building will be erected solely for office purposes and will be fireproof, air-conditioned and modern in every respect. K. H. King and Anita H. Eckles will be owners of the building and Frank Russell White is the architect.

The projected building will replace the historic Chateau Bonaparte, one of the residential landmarks of Washington. The latter four-story structure now housing offices and apartments, derived its name from its original owner, Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte 3d, grandson of Prince Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia and brother of Napoleon I, Emperor of France.

It was later sold by Jerome Bonaparte 4th, to Col. Robert Lee Longstreet, son of Gen. Longstreet, Confederate soldier, who admired Napoleon I, considering him among the greatest of military leaders. Charles Jerome Bonaparte also occupied the residence when he was a member of President Theodore Roosevelt's cabinet.

Indiana Limestone Loadings Increase

Carloadings from the limestone district of Indiana show an increase of 51 per cent for the months of December and January, over the similar period a year ago, according to the Indiana Building Stone Association of that State.

Plans for buildings involving the use of Indiana limestone also show a substantial increase. These figures indicate that 283 buildings have been figured on during December and January this year, involving 775,000 cubic feet of limestone, whereas a year ago 227 buildings, involving 315,000 cubic feet, were planned.

Building Material Sale Increased 52 % in Dallas

Dallas, Tex.—Illustrating the current trend toward home building and improvement, lumber and material dealers of this city showed an increase of 52 per cent for the month of January over the corresponding period a year ago, according to a report made to the local offices of the Federal Housing Administration.

Furniture stores were next in line in a general improvement of business conditions, showing a gain of 18.2 per cent for the same time. Building permits issued in the city showed a gain of 22 per cent for the highest monthly total since 1931.

Building on in Denver.

The building season for 1936 appears to be on in earnest in Denver. During the first week of March 102 building permits for a total of $185,905 were issued by the city building department. This is far in excess of the totals for most of the months during the last five years.

Latest Kitchens Are Feature of Sample Houses

Homes in 1400 Block of 18th Place Now Open for Inspection.

Spieler & Schneider are presenting some new homes featuring ultra-modern kitchens in the 1400 block of Eighteenth place southeast. There are sample houses at 1411 and 1430 Eighteenth place southeast, open daily and Sunday.

These homes adjacent to Anacostia Park, schools, shopping, and transportation, are priced at $6,250 and may be secured on permanent financing with no renewals.

They may be seen by going out Pennsylvania avenue southeast to Minnesota avenue, right to Nineteenth street, right to P street and left to the homes at Eighteenth place and P streets southeast.

Fine, modernly equipped, de luxe step-saving kitchens are but one of the many details of these dwellings. They have steel frame windows, screening, caulking, concrete porches, iron railings, weather-stripped doors, furred walls, cedar closets, tiled bath, full basement, hardwood floors, insulated sheet-rock on ceiling. They are of all-brick construction with six rooms and are arranged for two families.

Easy Way to Build Stepping Stones

An easy way of building an attractive garden path or a string of stepping stones is to make a form of lumber, 4 inches wide by 1⅛ inches thick with rectangular cells in multiples of 6 inches, thus blocks 6 by 6, 6 by 12, 6 by 18, 12 by 12, and 12 by 18 can be cast of concrete, and the top surface troweled smooth.

These blocks are then placed in the lawn either as individual stepping stones or put together in a pattern with 2-inch spaces between. The surface of the stones should be slightly below the surface of the ground so that a lawn mower may pass over them without hitting.

If variety of color is desired, a little lamp black can be added or different colored sands used in the individual blocks.

Imitation Panels Like Real Wood

Where inflammable materials are prohibited, the charm of wood paneling may still be obtained by using one of the compositions that simulate woods of various kinds. Everything from the simplest perpendicular pine paneling to the most intricate linen fold carving of the Elizabethan period may be had. So accurate is the effect that only careful inspection would disclose that the material is not actually wood.

Another development is wood veneer so thin that it is mounted on cloth and is put up like wall paper. This comes in many types of wood, and used with skeleton wood frame paneling gives very satisfactory results. It can also be used without the skeleton frame if wood plank effect is wanted.

Still another product is wall paper in imitation of wood. So a paneled room that to many seemed just a lovely but unattainable dream may become a realization. The modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration may be used to create a room of this type.

Patron Circulation A Store Problem

A question of prime importance in any store layout is that of circulation. Only in recent years has this been generally realized. Formerly stores were planned and fixtures bought and placed without much thought about how the customers would enter, where they would go when they got inside, and how they would get out. Whole sections of the store with show cases full of attractive goods were isolated because the traffic was short circuited. Purchasers saw these show cases only if they came with the express intention of buying something contained in those cases. Now the psychology of the shopper is being carefully studied and his susceptibility to sales appeal played upon.

Good store design brings the prospective purchaser in at a convenient point, guides him past one section after another, and finally, after the grand tour has been made, lands him at or near the point where he started without having to fight his way through cross-currents of other customers. Entrances are wide enough to accommodate incoming and outgoing lines without interference, and counters are run in long, continuous lines with only sufficient transverse lanes to accommodate the person who knows just where he intends to go when he enters and does not want to have to go all around the store to reach his destination.

'Whoopee Rooms' Need Special Floor

Now that so many houses have "Whoopee" and other oddly named rooms in their cellars, the question of finishing the floor is an important one.

One way is to mop the surface of the concrete with hot pitch, lay an inch of some insulation board—preferably one that is treated against absorption—and cement linoleum on top of that.

This gives a nice surface and considerable resiliency. There is one flooring on the market that comes with the insulation board and linoleum already cemented together.

be perched on the window sill warbling his morning greeting.

Down in the basement quarters, you will discover a paneled recreation room, a laundry, maid's room with bath and another brick fireplace, in addition to the furnace room, and the floors here are a very interesting feature. They are made of a processed concrete, smooth as hardwood, highly polished and painted a vivid tile-red. Dancing on their surface will be a delight, and the fireplace will no doubt be the scene of many a jolly weiner-roast and popcorn party. All the old-fashioned diversions are made possible in this versatile cellar.

The exterior of this handsome house vies for beauty with its interior. Tall stately trees, healthy pines hugging the front walls, attractive window boxes and a generous array of forsythia bushes on the lawn, all create an atmosphere that invites one to explore the inner beauties.

Those who appreciate fine workmanship and originality of detailed design, will wonder at the incredibly reasonable figure at which this gem is offered.

If you want to share my treat, drive out to Forest Hills by way of Connecticut avenue to Albemarle street. Turn right on Albemarle street to Linnean avenue, then north on Linnean avenue two blocks to Chesterfield place and the house is directly on the corner.

Now to the group of three homes on Roosevelt street, off Old Georgetown road in Bethesda, Md., one of which is being featured at present as a Post model home. The completed one, presented by T. J. Warren & Co., and built by J. R. Henderson is numbered 202, and the other two are in the process of construction.

I wandered through the finished product today and was charmed by the arrangement of rooms. The same grade of building materials that goes into the erection of the most expensive properties has been employed here. Entrance is into a center hall from which you have access to the living room, dining room and the second floor. An open fireplace topped with a carved colonial mantel is the center of interest in the living room, which is spacious enough to afford several tasteful arrangements of furniture. From the porch, leading off the living room, you have a commanding view of the surrounding countryside. To the left is a beautiful dining room, with cross ventilation. The kitchen, however, is probably what will "get" you. Yellow and white is carried out in every detail, including the electric refrigerator, especially painted to match the color-scheme of the spacious cupboards and attractive cooking range. The room is long enough to include a breakfast nook, or if it is desired, a downstairs lavatory.

The upstairs is planned so that every bit of space is utilized to the best advantage, creating a capacious illusion, though the house is somewhat small. The bedrooms are bright and cheerful and their irregular shape gives them a charming informality.

Three bedrooms and two baths, one having a bath and the other, a shower stall, both done in very striking tiles are surprisingly grouped around a small area, but each room is as spacious as one you would expect in a much larger home. Particularly interesting are the ceiling fixtures in the bedrooms, but you'll have to really see them to appreciate what I mean. Commodious clothes and linen closets are part of the convenience in this perfectly appointed little red brick house.

The basement is ideal; built-in laundry tubs, maid's room and plenty of space for storage. It is indeed a home designed and built for occupants of the discriminating taste.

To reach this worth-while residence, drive out Wisconsin avenue to the Bank of Bethesda, then bear left for one mile on Old Georgetown road, to Roosevelt street, then left one block to model home.

Never Lacquer Over Paint.

Most enamels and paints can be applied over each other. They can also be applied over shellac and lacquer. Beware, however, of lacquering over paints, enamels or varnishes. The lacquer acts as a paint "remover" and trouble will ensue.

Theater Picks Contest Model Of Miller Firm

Incorporated in Elaborate Display in Lobby of the Earle.

A singular honor was paid the firm of W. C. & A. Miller, realtors and developers, last week when one of the models developed in its current "My Home" contest was chosen by Warner Bros. executives to illustrate the film "Snowed Under," which opened at the Earle Theater Friday.

Model "E," designed by Jullien M. Winnemore, 4701 Connecticut avenue, which was runner-up in the public voting for the home to be built by W. C. & A. N. Miller in the Westerleigh section of Wesley Heights, was selected by the theater representatives as exemplifying the typical stone New England farmhouse which serves as background for the new movie.

Much of the credit for the distinction accorded this design accrues to Carmelo Aruta, well-known artist, who transmitted the idea of Winnemore, a layman without architectural experience, into the striking model which gained so much support in the public voting period a week ago. Winnemore's design was the only one of its three other compatriots to give the winning model any sort of fight during the contest. On the last day of voting, for instance, Model "E" polled some 400 votes, to pull within 100 of upsetting the leader.

The beautifully constructed model was incorporated in an elaborate display in the lobby of the Earle, where, capped and surrounded by snow, it was said to have captured perfectly the spirit of old New England, scene of the current film.

Additional Display.

Selection of this model as an authentic representation of old New England traditions is but another of the many expressions of confidence in W. C. & A. N. Miller's competition as an aid in furthering public interest in fine home design. So many have been the requests for further showing of the "My Home" models, in fact, that W. C. & A. N. Miller is now arranging for additional public display in the near future.

Meantime, a letter of appreciation was received by W. C. & A. N. Miller from William F. Tapp, young department store salesman, whose original design won the $100 offered for the publicly preferred home idea as represented by the English Provincial Model "B."

Tapp, who is 23 and long has aspired to an architectural career, informed the firm its prize money already had been placed as down payment on tuition for the architectural course he is to undertake this fall at Columbia Technical Institute here. Coupled with financial assistance from his retired postal inspector father, the W. C. & A. N. Miller award will see Tapp through his first year in architecture. Excerpts from Tapp's letter follow:

"May I express my appreciation to W. C. & A. N. Miller for the opportunity to pursue a career that you and others have made possible for me.

Enters Columbia Tech.

"As a result of the contest you recently sponsored, I am able to begin my preparation for an architectural profession this year. I am entering Columbia Tech Institute here, beginning with this September term.

"Again I want to thank the firm of W. C. & A. N. Miller for its untiring efforts and co-operation in this contest . . . and hope it is rewarded with the honors it rightfully deserves.

"In closing may I say you have made a true friend and booster for your firm.

"Yours,

"WILLIAM F. TAPP."

Final work on the plans is now being completed by Architect Leon Chatelain who developed Tapp's design to the point reproduced in the winning model, and ground is expected to be broken for the actual house within the next several days.

Chatelain already has handed Woodward & Lothrop's decoration department the finished sketch of the living room of the winning home and the department store staff is busy reproducing the room which will be decorated and placed on display for one month on the sixth floor of the store.

Wooded Setting Features New Calvert Homes

New Residences Are Only a 10-Minute Ride From Downtown Area.

The first warm days of spring are bringing many new things to see and thousands of people out to see them. Among the worthwhile sights of the season are the homes at 3821-47 Calvert street northwest, a pleasant ten-minute ride from downtown, in the heart of one of Washington's real wooded sections.

Located on large lots, with natural woods bordering them on the rear, the spaciousness of the setting on which these homes have been built offers unusual attractions to the city dweller.

These homes are within a five-minute walk of the business district on Wisconsin avenue, with the most modern markets, schools and churches and offering rapid bus transportation to any part of the city.

The construction and appointments of these homes are worth a drive out Wisconsin avenue to Calvert street, then west to these distinctive examples of what the modern builder can offer at a price strikingly moderate.

These homes have six rooms and two tiled baths, a spacious recreation room, 17x19 feet, finished in knotty pine with floors of asphalt tiles; a large living room, 16x17.4 feet; a kitchen to delight, containing an Estate gas range with top broiler, Oxford cabinets and modern electric refrigeration.

Upstairs are two unusually large bedrooms wisth several closets and two baths, one tub and one shower. The master bedroom is 11x17 feet, with two large closets and a dressing alcove.

Those who wish to get an idea of how attractive these homes may be made have the opportunity in the furnished exhibit home at 3831 Calvert street. The house is furnished by Hilda N. Miller.

The J. A. McKeever Co., sales agents for the property, is having this house kept open daily and Sundays.

$10,000,000 Ready For Ohio Homes

Toledo, Ohio.—An unnamed Eastern syndicate has made $10,000,000 available for mortgage and construction loans in this area, according to an announcement by a local firm which will handle the business.

The money will be used to purchase insured mortgages under the regulations of the Federal Housing Administration, and either refinancing or new construction instruments will be accepted.

The entrance of the syndicate into the field and the lending of such an amount of money under Federal Housing Administration regulations will be the greatest stimulus that has yet been devised to stabilize the real estate market in Toledo, it was said.

Finest Architects Work on One Home

Pittsburgh, Pa.—More architectural talent probably will go into the model home, center of attraction at the Pittsburgh National Home Show than has ever been expended on any one house in this city.

The Pittsburgh chapter of the American Institute of Architects has announced that it will create the design for this home, with the collaboration of the city's finest architects.

The house will be designed particularly as an adaptation to Pittsburgh living and will cost about $5,000.

Construction Awards Up.

Engineering construction awards last week, according to the Engineering News Record, totaled $48,-656,000. Private awards accounted for $23,423,000 of this total. A year ago the total was $27,721,000, of which $14,963,000 were private.

Garden Without a Wall Is Only Half a Garden

A garden without a wall is only half a garden. It need not be a brick wall or a stone or concrete wall, for a living wall of evergreens or some hedge shrub will serve admirably. But something there should be to shut out the world and form a background for flowers. If the garden is small, the wall can be kept low so as not to shade it too much, but even a low wall gives a feeling of privacy that is necessary for the real enjoyment of a garden.

Housing Act Altered.

Birmingham, Ala.—An amendment to the Federal Housing enabling act of this State has passed the Senate and has gone to the House of Representatives for action. It provides that insured mortgages be recognized at their face value where deposits are required by the State from financial institutions.

Gas Light Co. Division Dines Wholesalers

Boothby Speaks at Dinner About Newly-Created Promotion Office.

The promotional division of Washington Gas Light Co. was host to the wholesalers of modern gas kitchen equipment at a dinner meeting in the Raleigh last Monday. More than 60 were present, representing officers and ebmployes of the Washington Gas Light Co. and members of the wholesale distriutors recently appointed to handle the Electrolux gas refrigera- and modern gas ranges.

The purpose of the dinner meeting was to welcome the new members of the wholesalers' division and to explain to them the work of the newly created promotional division.

E. J. Boothby, vice president and general manager of Washington Gas Light Co. spoke on "Co-operaton" and outlined the plan of his organization to furnish greater help and assistance through this new department. He mentioned the co-operative dealers' plan for the plumbing and heating trade in 1933, the co-operative campaigns in 1935 with department stores on modern gas ranges, and climaxed his talk with the plans for the promotional division to co-operate in wholesale merchandising through the newly created wholesale outlets on new construction.

He told of how this new department, with its trained personnel, is contacting builders, to co-operate with them in every detail of their planning, to furnish them the best ideas on gas engineering and gas equipment so that their homes may be well planned and thoroughly modern in every respect.

Mr. Boothby also spoke of the growth and possibilities of gas merchandising and went into some detail regarding the gas replacement markets and the vast new construction program which will see hundreds of new homes built in Washington this year.

H. M. Brundage, jr., general sales manager of the company, discussed what the plan of the new promotional division meant to the dealers —a unified plan, with trained gas consultants.

The firms included the new wholesalers' division are exclusive wholesale distrbutors for the Electrolux gas refrigerator. These firms which also merchandise modern gas ranges making it possible for them to make quotations on "all gas kitchens," and their representatives are as follows: F. P. May Hardware Co., S. E. Sapp; Barber & Ross, M. Johnson; Rudolph & West Co., V. A. Welte; Fries, Beall & Sharpe Co., L. E. Williams, and Whitehead Metal Products Co., R. Swearingen.

Concrete Home Adds to Savings on Mortgages

Washington architects, contractors, bankers, and real estate men last week were shown that home owners who build a house of firesafe cement materials save the equivalent of the cost of an extra mortgage, often as much as $1,000. The speaker was D. R. Collins, Chicago housing authority, who addressed the conference to study present trends in home building, in the Willard Hotel.

"The owner of a house with concrete walls and floors pays so much less for insurance and maintenance, and his depreciation is so much less," Collins declared, "that these savings offset any additional construction cost through using firesafe materials. Besides such savings, which continue through the life of the building, the resale value of a firesafe house is greater than the non-firesafe house at any period. Then, too, concrete walls and floors keep out termites, which officials figures show damaged buildings in the United States to the extent of $50,000,000 last year."

Five advantages which Collins claimed for firesafe houses included increase in real estate values in the immediate neighborhood; reduction of fire losses; lowering of community fire hazards; monthly savings which can be applied on the purchase of modern house equipment, and additional security to the mortgage holder.

The speaker showed slide pictures of many recently built concrete houses which he said were typical of modern trend. These included a pitched roof bungalow on Long Island; a unique house with roof deck for recreation, built at Long Beach, Ind.; a new style house just completed at Miami Beach, Fla., and a strikingly modern house at Reading, Mass.

Each, the speaker said, represented the utmost value in beauty and livability, besides being of firesafe, termite-proof construction. He showed them as being typical of the newest styles of house design being built to meet the popular demand in both North and South.

A. E. Landvoigt, chief underwriter for the Federal Housing Administration, described in detail the relation between financing rates and the type of construction of a house. He said that preference in financing is given to the firesafe, durable type of construction because, as an investment, it is less subject to depreciation loss.

Those in attendance included Washington architects, concrete products manufacturers, concrete and mason contractors, home builders, real estate developers, and building and loan officials.

Cream Color Background.

As a background for treasured French furniture, a New York decorator has chosen cream-painted walls and woodwork for her living room. Against this color, chairs upholstered in a rich yellow brocade, brown curtains and a velvet couch in wood green show off to excellent advantage. Other chairs are upholstered in brown leather and here and there is a flash of chartreuse. The carpet is a neutral mole shade.

Winter Hard on Houses, So Check Up Exterior

Winter is hard on houses—frost and snow and cold all take their toll. So when the spring sun begins to get warm have a look at the exterior of your house.

Is the roof covering all right? Has the chimney been damaged? Do the gutters sag? Are the downspouts cracked or bulged? Do the window sills need repainting? Have the porch or entrance steps "heaved?" Are the trellises broken or pulled away?

A general check-up with minor repairs may save major ones later on.

Paint Floor of Cellar To Preserve Concrete

To keep a cellar floor clean, paint it. Concrete, unless it is treated with a hardener, will "dust" and cause a fine powder to rise when it is walked on or when material is dragged over it. Paint not only prevents this dusting but gives a clean, glossy look to the floor that encourages its proper care.

There are many paints made for covering concrete, so be sure the paint you use is one of these; ordinary paint will not give as good wear.

Gain in Request For Community Permits Hailed

Is Seen as Encouraging Sign of Sound Planning by Local Builders.

One of the very encouraging signs of the sound planning that is now being followed by local builders is the splendid increase in applications for subdivision approval under consideration in the District of Columbia Office of the Federal Housing Administration.

J. Reilly Stanton, director of the local office, said last week that a greater number of applications of this type were now receiving the careful examination required by the Administration than at any other time since the opening of this office.

These proposed developments in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia, are subjected to the most careful scrutiny of specialists of the Administration to determine whether they possess the many factors that tend towards the establishment of sound communities. Stanton pointed out that careful preliminary work of this sort eliminates the danger of overproduction and poor planning that so often in the past led to unattractive, hard to sell houses.

The desire of the local builder to have the benefit of this expert advice and assistance of the Federal Housing Administration is a splendid commentary on the judgment of the local developers.

TelephoneGain Reflects Rise In U.S.Business

Bell Installations Last Year Increased by 461,000.

New York, April 4.—Marked improvement in general business conditions during the latter part of 1935 and the first quarter of 1936 has increased telephone installations more rapidly than anticipated, according to a report on telephone and telegraph companies issued today by Poor's Publishing Co.

"Last year's total gain for the Bell System rose to 461,000 installations, against a gain of 298,000 in 1934, and a loss of 630,000 in 1933," says the report. "Although the total at the end of 1935 reached 13,845,000 the number of Bell telephones in service was still 1,746,000 below the high point reached in 1930. January and February installations totaled 123,400, compared with 67,000 in the corresponding 1935 months.

"Gratifying as were increased volume and higher earnings, the system has far to go before net profits reach the 1929 level, or even cover present dividend payments. Since that year expenses have grown enormously while rates have been cut. In 1929, 21.74 per cent of gross income was carried through to net. In 1935 only 14.21 per cent filtered through. Specific deterrents to the recording of much larger earnings this year are higher taxes that are outlined, the large expenses involved in meeting requirements of the Social Security Act, and the present rate levels, which are lower than the 1935 average.

On April 1, 1931, the previous high point, market value was $53,336,000,000, while the low point for the past decade was established July 1, 1932, at $15,600,00,000.

April Expected To Wipe Out Flood Losses

Industrial Index Only Slightly Lowered by Damage.

New York, April 4.—The most important single factor affecting business last month was the flood condition prevailing over a large portion of the industrial East. The sections most heavily hit were western Pennsylvania, the Ohio Valley and the Connecticut River valley. Central New and eastern Pennsylvania suffered, but the damage was largely to individuals rather than to the larger industrial enterprises. In spite of the large amount of damage, the general level of industrial activity was lowered but little according to the monthly statistical summary of the Standard Statistics Co., of New York.

Industrial production in March around 79.8 (1926 equals 100) as compared with an estimate the first part of March that the index would be at 80.6. This same flood factor will have a stimulating effect on April business, with every energy in the devastated sections bent on rehabilitation. Supplying materials with which to repair the damage done by water will call for increased activity in many different industries, particularly those handling building materials, and railroad traffic will be extra-seasonally heavier for the hauling of those supplies.

Steel activity this month is expected to average around 61 per cent of capacity, with the peak operating rate likely to be in the neighborhood of 65 per cent. Operations for March are now placed at 56.6 per cent and activity last April averaged 49.8 per cent. It the 61 per cent estimate is realized it will mark the highest operating rate for any month since June, 1930.

Steels, Rails and Motors Lead Stock Prices to 5-Year Highs

Favorable Domestic News and an Improvement in the European Situation Furnishes Basis for Brisk Advance.

By Frank MacMillen,

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, April 4.—Led by the former bull market bellwethers—steels, rails and motors—stocks today put on one of the fastest rallies in several weeks. Many issues bettered their highest marks for the past five years or longer with gains ranging from 1 to around 4 points. A profit-taking wave in the final few minutes did little more than shade extreme advances.

Brokers attributed the buoyant recovery partly to an apparent turn for the better in the European situation and to a highly optimistic brand of domestic industrial news.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks pushed up .5 of a point to 64.3, a new top since July 21, 1931. It was the most pronounced Saturday recovery since March 14. Transfers totaled 1,011,470 shares against 656,780 a week ago.

During the first hour the list was extremely dull, but subsequent buying in the carriers brought nibbles in other groups from traders who had been sitting on the sidelines waiting for a sign as to which way to jump.

Steels Head Activity.

Then the automobile division was given a ride with the rails. But it was not until the steels leaped to the fore that the ticker tape began to hum. In the last half hour the buying rush became sufficiently rapid so that the ticker tape fell two minutes behind floor transactions.

Equities received no aid from commodities, most of which were narrowly irregular throughout. Wheat ended ⅝ of a cent a bushel lower to up ¼ and corn was ⅛ off to ¼ firmer. Cotton eased 5 to 15 cents a bale.

The cheerier outlook in the foreign sector was reflected by steadier foreign exchange markets. The French franc came back for a gain of .00⅛ of a cent at 6.59⅛ cents and sterling was unchanged at $4.95½. Other monetary units were around their closing Friday levels.

Bonds, as a whole, did better, although they were not in the same class as stocks.

Steel equities entered the spotlight following predictions of another substantial rise in mill operations next week. In addition there was a report that U. S. Steel had purchased between 20,000 and 30,000 tons of scrap. This is usually taken as an indication of an expected upturn in steel production.

Automobile issues had the benefit of an expanding output with prospects that spring sales would be more than satisfactory. Hopes for a growing traffic volume, with a consequent increase in earnings, helped the rails.

On the bullish side also was the statement of the Bell System showing a gain of 77,000 stations in March. This was the second best month's increase since 1929.

While the Washington tax hearings were still being watched closely, the financial district took a little heart from forecasts that net taxable income of corporations in 1936 would run around $1,000,000,000 over last year.

Shares of U. S. Steel touched 70 for the first time since 1931 and closed up 2 at 69⅝. Bethlehem ended at its top, up 1⅜ at 61⅛. Other conspicuous gainers included Youngstown Sheet & Tube, up 4¼ at 55⅞; Republic Steel, up 1¼ at 25⅜; Chrysler, up 1⅛ at 100⅝; General Motors, up ⅞ at 70⅛; Santa Fe, up 1 at 78; N. Y. Central, up 1⅝ at 38⅝; American Telephone, up 1⅛ at 162½, and Westinghouse, up 1½ at 121.

Bankers Name Program Body For Convention

F. G. Addison, Jr., Will Head Committee for May Gathering.

General satisfaction was expressed yesterday with the selection of the men to comprise the program committee for the convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association to be held next month at the Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Charles H. Doing, president of the association and first vice president of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., has appointed Francis G. Addison, jr., president, Security Savings & Commercial Bank, chairman of the committee, with Wilcer J. Waller, vice president and cashier, Hamilton National Bank, as vice chairman.

Associated with them in the selection of speakers and topics to be presented at the annual session are Victor B. Deyber, chairman of the board, Second National Bank; Robert V. Fleming, president, Riggs National Bank and president of the American Bankers Association; W. Frank D. Herron, vice president, Union Trust Co.; Lanier P. McLachlen, president C. McLachlen Banking Corporation; Howard Moran and Frederick P. H. Siddons, respectively, vice president and secretary of American Security & Trust Co.; Maurice D. Rosenberg, president, Bank of Commerce & Savings and Horace F. Stokes, assistant cashier, National Metropolitan Bank. All but two members of this committee are past presidents of the association.

Chairman Addison says that it will be the purpose of the committee to eliminate the usual routine section and committee reports from the stated program and in their place to have the chairmen present recommendations for discussions by the delegates present. Addison also stated that announcements will be made of speakers and topics as soon as his committee has received acceptance from those selected and invited. It is expected that Robert V. Fleming as president of the American Bankers Association will be one of those invited to address the convention.

Liverpool—Wheat futures were higher early in day on unfavorable American Southwest weather reports. The market reacted later due to the small demand for cash wheat. Cotton futures closed 3 to 4 points lower under week-end realising and scattered hedging.

Allied Chem. Sues SEC to Hold Data

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission was served with papers yesterday by the Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation designed to stop the commission from publishing certain confidential financial data. The suit was filed in the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York. It sought to restrain the release of figures on the company's gross sales which had been filed with the commission with the company's application for permanent listing on the New York Stock Exchange.

At that time the company also had asked confidential treatment for the list of its holdings of other securities but finally agreed to release them. They were published a short time ago. Commission officials said they were disappointed that the company has taken this action, in view of their earlier agreement on the investment portfolio. Several other companies have similar suits against the commission.

Railroad Purchases Declined Last Year

Railroad purchases of fuel, material and supplies during 1935 aggregated $593,025,000 according to complete reports just filled by the carriers with the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads and made public yesterday.

This is slightly below the 1934 supply bill, which amounted to $600,224,000, but is higher than 1933 when they totaled only $465,850,000. In 1929 the railroads spent $1,329,535,000 for supplies.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, April 4 (AP).—(United States Department of Agriculture).—Sales of wool were very light in Boston during the past week. A few buyers were in the market looking at offerings, but the small purchases were at prices below recent nominal quotations. One-quarter blood strictly combing Ohio wools were sold at 40@41 cents in the grease for old clips. Other grades of strictly combing Ohio wools were quoted at 33@35 cents in the grease for fine, at 35@36 cents for ½ blood, and at 40@41 cents for ⅜ blood. Quotations weakened on the few remaining lots of old wools as a result of the lower prices at which small quantities of early shorn wools were offered.

Gardeners of City Look Forward to Brilliant Floral Easter Even With Poor Weather

Early Spring Blooms Held Up by Winter

Flower Stores Offering Many Varieties to Suit Every Taste.

Best of the Pot Plants for Garden Use Is Hardy Azaleas.

By Crowell Baynes.

Prospects for a brilliantly floral Easter were never brighter than they are this year, with Easter falling fairly late and the earliest spring bloom held up somewhat by a severe winter. With the Japanese cherries and magnolias as principal features and with daffodils and some of the early tulips and hyacinths in bloom in gardens, Easter will be colorful if the weather is even half favorable.

For home decoration the florists will have a variety of Easter offering to suit many tastes, with the Easter lily as the ruling favorite. For confirmed outdoor gardeners there are better choices. Some florists force a few of the hardy lilies, the Regal in particular, and when these are not pushed too hard it is practical to plant them out after they bloom with a good chance that they will take hold and grow satisfactorily, though they will not bloom this year.

Azalias Good Choice.

Perhaps the best choice for pot plants suitable for garden use is one of the hardy azaleas. These do not require severe forcing to bring them into bloom now—just greenhouse culture with enough heat to prevent freezing. After they have bloomed indoors it is only necessary to harden them for two weeks or so by keeping them outdoors when it is fairly warm and protecting them from really cold weather. Then plant them out in acid soil and give them a leaf mulch and plenty of water and they will bloom year after year. Some of the brilliant displays of hardy azaleas in small gardens in Washington have been acquired in this way by gardeners who buy one or two good plants of a hardy variety each Easter. Not all the florists' azaleas are hardy, and buyers, as a rule, must depend on the advice of a reliable dealer in selecting azaleas which will live through cold winters.

In the garden spring spading is likely to be the principal activity, with considerable planting, both of seeds and of plants, whenever the ground is ready. Spading time is the best season to do a little extra work that will save work when the mercury is reaching for the ceiling and any exertion at all—even holding the hose—is too much.

As suggested last week, a liberal improvement of the soil with humus and sand or coal ashes makes cultivating and weeding easier. Now is the time, too, to provide in advance for subirrigation, which will make "sprinkling" almost entirely unnecessary, saving water, saving time and encouraging the plants to put down deep-feeding roots that promote vigorous growth—even in dry weather.

Beyond Reach.

Unless the subsoil is exceptionally sandy, subirrigation is entirely practical. In a long border or bed this can be provided with rows of porous clay drain tile 3 or 4 feet apart and placed just beyond the reach of a spade. At the high end of the bed provide a curved section to reach to the surface. Water the bed by letting the hose flow into the tile until the soil is well soaked. This will not be required often.

Tile is not very expensive, but there are substitutes that cost less. One is made by two boards nailed together at right angles along their edges to form an A and buried the same depth as the tile. A cheap and effective method is to dig a ditch below the spade level and fill it with good-sized stones and clinkers from the furnace and cover this with sod turned upside down. Or lay three saplings in a ditch and cover them with sods. With any of these, arrange a vertical length of pipe or tile to reach from the surface to the underground waterway. The whole idea is to get the water down well below the surface and give it a chance to spread.

For small beds, it is easy to provide subirrigation in any one of several ways. Invert a large flower pot in the bed, with the open "top" about 20 inches underground and the "bottom" of the pot a foot below the surface with a tile or pipe over the drainage hole to let the water in. Or a big tin can will do with holes punched in the sides. Also a few good sized stones with a flat stone to cover them will allow reservoir space of the same kind. Any of these arrangements will water a space from two to four feet in each direction. Two of them will water a border 6 by 15 feet.

In extra wet periods these devices are somewhat helpful in promoting drainage and aerating the soil in the bed, but in the main they are useful in getting the water to the plants with a minimum of lost time and wasted water. Last year they were hardly needed in beds with a good humus supply, but, as a rule, Washington gardens need some supplementary water and this is the practical way of supplying it without disturbing the dust mulch or the peat mulch.

The only apparent drawback is that these systems offer lurking places for slugs. In a way, however, this is an advantage. Just drop in a crystal or two of copper sulphate when supplying water. Even the weakest solution of copper sulphate (blue stone) means death to slugs.

Tonic Food Suggested For Hardy Perennials

The National Garden Bureau suggests that just as soon as the hardy perennials begin to show new growth, and before the first cultivation, it is a good plan to give them a tonic feeding of a complete plant food and work it lightly into the soil. This will start them into more vigorous growth that will make good use of a heavier fertilization a few weeks later.

On a gray April day buildings and trees look dim and shadowy, but a fine white magnolia in the Department of Agriculture grounds gleams brightly. This large tree was moved to its present location about three years ago, just as it finished blooming in another part of the grounds.

Flower Show Attempts New Stunt

Chicagoans to Reproduce Unglaciated Section of Illinois.

Exhibit Is Only Major Event Managed Only by Women.

The Chicago Flower Show is unique, in that it is the only major show in the country managed entirely by women. It is wholly amateur and sponsored by the Garden Club of Illinois, which always has for its project the entrance garden. Last year this garden was a reproduction of a Southern garden in moonlight, and was so lovely that this year the club realized it would have to have something dramatically different, and decided on a reproduction of the unglaciated part of Illinois, and Starved Rock country, a rocky glen, with high waterfall-ferns growing from crevices of the rocks, a forest of white birches with an underplanting of violets and drifts of daffodils. This shown with lights, giving the effect of bright moonlight, was spectacular and beautiful.

Another feature was a French regency house, a project of the Garden Club of America. Four member clubs of the Illinois Federation, affiliates of the Garden Club of America, developed the grounds, the entrance court, the terrace, the parterre and the service yard and garden.

The American Horticultural Society will meet in Washington on April 17. The date was postponed so that members could attend the Narcissus Show of the Garden Club of Virginia which will be held in Alexandria on April 15 and 16 and the Daffodil Show of the Federated Garden Clubs of Maryland, which will be held in the Community Parish House, Guilford, on April 16 and 17. The meeting of the Horticultural Society will feature narcissus and there will be a lecture by Mrs. Stuart Foote, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Georgetown.

Mrs. Herman Hollerith was hostess on Friday at the meeting of the Garden Club of Georgetown. Mrs. Hollerith was the founder of the Georgetown club. The program consisted of a discussion of spring flowers by members of the club. At a recent meeting of the club held at the home of Mrs. Ernest Lewis, the speaker was Mr. Finnan, superintendent of parks, who spoke on the proposed changes in Montrose Park, Georgetown.

An interesting project being undertaken by the garden section of the Woman's Club of Alexandria will be a drive among the members of the club and the citizens of Alexandria, to stress the planting of forsythia. The club will be a clearing house for plants donated. The garden section met on Thursday at the home of Mrs. G. S. Vest in Jefferson Park. Ivan Anderson gave an illustrated talk on chrysanthemums. There was an exhibit of spring flowers in antique containers.

The Alexandria Garden Club will hold the club narcissus show on Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Clarence Leadbeater. The Alexandria club is in charge of the State narcissus show of the Garden Club of Virginia, to be held in the armory on April 15 and 16.

Dr. B. Y. Morrison will give an illustrated talk on narcissus at the meeting of the Woodridge Garden Club tomorrow evening. The Woodridge club has set April 14 as the date for the club's narcissus show.

The annual rose show of the Garden Club of Virginia will be held at the Farmington Country Club, Charlottesville, May 20, sponsored by the Albemarle Garden Club and the Rivanna Garden Club.

Garden Queries

Question.—Can you tell me the name of the vine which I have seen in several places near Washington growing up through evergreen trees so that in the fall it looks as though the evergreen is blooming with small white flowers? J. K. C.

Answer.—You probably mean Clematis paniculata. It is used sometimes in this way and is highly effective with box, red cedar, the tall junipers, and other evergreens with deep green foliage. To be sure that the vine will not injure the tree it is a good policy to prune it hard every two or three years, taking out most of the vine. I would play safe and keep it out of box plantings, but use it with the less valuable evergreens that grow more rapidly.

Some questions of general interest will be answered briefly on this page. For personal replies, address the garden editor, inclosing stamped envelope.

Garden Calendar

Do spring spading whenever the soil is dry enough to work into a good seed bed. Replenish humus, using well rotted animal manures, pulverized manures from stockyards, well-rotted compost, leaf soil, or peat.

Many perennials — particularly those blooming after June 15—may be divided just as they are starting into growth, phlox, rudbeckias, perennial bellflowers, mints, evening primrose, hardy asters, Shasta daisy, carnations and dianthus varieties. Chrysanthemums will do well if division is delayed a week or two.

Plant fine seeded varieties of annuals and perennials in flats or pots on a warm porch or in a cold frame.

Plant half hardy annuals in open ground.

Work winter leaf mulches into soil in shrubbery, being careful not to cultivate too deep around shallow-rooted shrubs such as rhododendrons. Azaleas and rhododendrons need only shallow cultivation, and remulching with fresh leaves.

Fertilize and roll lawn and sow a good mixture of grass seed in thin spots.

Go over hybrid tea and hybrid perpetual roses again, pruning dead wood and shortening live wood in accord with the general habit of the plant. Strong growing bushes should have longer canes than those less vigorous.

Order summer blooming bulbs for spring planting—gladiolus, tigridia, montbretia, etc.

Consider the new Korean hybrid chrysanthemums and the dwarf perennial asters when planning new plants for fall bloom.

Most homes could use another good climbing rose to advantage.

Where hedges have suffered severely from winter damage, it will be safe to cut out much of the dead wood, but give them time to show how much live wood there is before cutting them back hard.

Discrimination In Forsythias Recommended

Many District Properties Would Be Improved by Using Two Forms.

Forsythia bloomed particularly well this spring, probably because the cold winter discouraged winter blooming which sometimes reduces the number of buds left for the normal blooming season. Many Washington properties would be improved by more discriminating use of the two distinct forms of forsythia that are available.

Forsythia spectabilis and Forsythia viridissima are erect in habit, the former with slightly larger individual blossoms. The other form is Forsythia suspensa, with longer and more slender shoots that are more graceful and willowy, and more pleasing in many planting spaces.

Best When Sprawling.

This form is at its best when allowed to sprawl over a wall or hedge, and is often more desirable in foundation plantings.

The more erect forms are well placed when it is necessary to mow the lawn close to the shrub, or for specimen plantings in or at the edges of grass.

While the plants are blooming is the best time to consider changes. Immediately after the blooming season is as good a time as any to move forsythia. If the top is cut back somewhat at this time, the shrub has a full season of growth to produce the new wood which will bear the blossoms next year.

Some Prefer Shrubs.

Some gardeners prefer forsythia shrubs of medium size, rather than the big clump into which it grows naturally. It is easy to have several small forsythias coming along each year to take the place of overgrown clumps.

In the late fall take a few cuttings of new growth a foot or less in length and bury all but an inch or two in light soil in a protected spot. By the next fall they will be rooted and ready for planting, and to three or four years will make stocky bushes for replacements.

The time to prune forsythias is after the bloom fades, but many Washington gardeners prune too severely and get a sheared effect. As a rule it is better to let individual shoots develop naturally and reduce the clump by cutting out whole shoots just above the crown.

Bloom Variety Fine Zinnia Haageana Point

This department has been recommending Zinnia Haageana as a desirable garden plant that is not used as often as it might be. Several dealers are offering seed this year—several of them in named varieties that produce uniform or nearly uniform bloom. Individually these varieties may be superior to the average of the mixed seed, but one of the principal charms of Zinnia Haageana has been the infinite variety of bloom from a single seed packet, with hardly a duplication in 100 plants.

Elms Kept in Best of Condition Less Likely to Fall Prey of Pest Beetles That Carry Dutch Disease Usually Pass the Robust Kind; Washingtonians Advised to Take Precautions.

Discovery of a case of Dutch elm disease at Brunswick, Md., last year is not reason enough for active alarm for Washington's many fine elms. The infection at Brunswick probably came from diseased elm logs shipped through on the railroad. But it does emphasize the desirability of taking extra-good care of elms here.

In fighting the disease in the area surrounding New York City, the Federal and State forces have adopted the sensible but sometimes painful policy of eradicating dangerous elms, whether they are actively infected with the disease or not.

The beetles that carry the pest are much less likely successfully to attack trees that are thoroughly healthy and vigorous.

Trees sick with other diseases, or poorly fed, or with dead, dying or decaying limbs, are easy prey for the beetle, and the eradication crews have been cutting out this type of tree as a matter of sanitation and disease prevention.

There is every reason to expect that they will follow the same course if the disease shows here. By that time it would be too late to save poorly fed and poorly pruned elms. To feed elms—and shade trees generally—it is practical to apply chemical fertilizers in holes punched in the soil, with most of the holes in the area under the ends of the limbs, where the drip from rains is heaviest.

A stout iron rod, an inch or so in diameter can be driven or pushed into the soil to a depth of 24 to 30 inches to make a pattern of holes 2 to 3 feet apart.

Then pour into each hole two or three tablespoons of a complete plant food. Another good fertilizer is to mix two parts of cottonseed meal with one part of a fertilizer comparatively low in nitrogen, and use twice as much to a hole.

It will be wise to give the elms special care in pruning. Make clean cuts that will heal if any branches have died or have been broken during the winter. But do more than this. If there are old wounds that have not healed well and if decay has started, it will be wise to cut back the decayed limb back to the next crotch below where it will be possible to make a clean cut.

These suggestions apply generally to all shade trees worth the effort, but particularly to the elms because of the possibility that the Dutch elm disease may invade this district and cause a general cleaning out of all elms that are not in vigorous and thrifty condition.

Death Beats Dog On Mercy Errand

Faithful to Master, He Gets Help, But Too Late.

By the Associated Press.

Stonecliff, Ont., April 4.—Carrying out the last command of his master, a dog, tired from breaking through six miles of heavy brush, trotted into this settlement with a distress sign—a mitten—from Lawrence Larochelle, 25-year-old trapper.

The faithful dog had done his best to reach the village in time to summon aid to save his master. When help arrived at the trapper's lonely cabin, Larochelle had been dead more than a day from two gunshot wounds. A rifle lay across his chest.

Somebody recognized the dog when it came to the settlement, 125 miles northwest of Ottawa, with the mitten tied around his neck. A party was formed and hurried to the cabin.

It was believed the youth accidentally shot himself and tried to seek aid by sending the dog to the village. When help did not arrive in a few hours, it was believed Larochelle ended his intense pain with another shot.

Just Dogs

What Price Puppy

The first question one hears from a prospective puppy buyer is, "How much shall I pay for a puppy?" and it should be the last question. If you are going to buy a dog to keep for a few months, the price you pay or the puppy you get will make little difference, but if you are purchasing a companion for the next eight or ten years, as most people do when they buy a puppy, why not get the best?

You can buy a puppy for as low as $10, but what are you getting? All small puppies are cute. There is probably no better salesman than an awkward roly poly pup. You will want to know if he is pedigreed and will undoubtedly be assured that he is and perhaps even eligible for registration. Just how much do you know about pedigrees? The average person knows nothing and may get a purebred and still have a mighty poor specimen of his breed.

Let's compare the history of a cheap puppy and that of one bred by a breeder of quality dogs. The first thing one must have to get good puppies is good breeding or foundation stock. The man selling cheap dogs cannot afford to get the best blood lines. He doesn't get enough for the puppies so he picks up a purebred female, any one as long as it is registered, mates her with a stud he probably knows nothing about except that he, too, is registered, and you have your puppy. He gives no thought to breeding to correct faults in conformation or disposition. He can't, he must have puppies as fast and as cheaply as possible. The female is bred as often as nature will allow, sapping her health and vitality, which must be reflected in her offspring. If your puppy is of the sixth, seventh or eighth litter, and he probably is, he has two strikes on him before he is born.

Good dog food costs money. The food the mother should have when in whelp is expensive and the special foods, etc., the young puppy needs would run his costs too high so he buys cheap food and sells the pup as soon as possible. The result is usually that the puppy born in one of these puppy factories and failing to have the start he needs has little or no resistance and, in a great majority of cases, dies before reaching maturity.

Then look at the other picture. The man who is breeding as a hobby or avocation or any reputable breeder of high-grade dogs. He buys the best females he can get, after studying their pedigrees until he knows exactly what to expect from them. Then he may spend months looking for a male whose lineage may tend to correct any faults in the female line. He won't breed until he is reasonably sure he is improving his stock by so doing. The stud fee for the dog he wants may run into three figures. The prospective mother is put on a special diet, care being taken to see that she gets the proper amount of vitamins and minerals necessary for the proper development of her puppies. When the pups are born they are treated and cared for a lot better than some babies. Some not developing as fast as the others are put on a special diet. Cod liver oil, viosterol, calcium gluconate and a dozen other things run the cost of feeding to several times that of the other breeder.

This female is not bred often enough to hurt her; she is too valuable. Her puppies are born strong and vigorous ready for the fight for life ahead of them. They get what they need to develop properly, regardless of expense, and go to their new homes at salable age. Given reasonable care they will mature into dogs to be proud of. The actual cost of raising this kind of pup to salable age is not less than $25 and often considerably more, not figuring the breeder's time, rent, heat or light—just the actual cash outlay in breeding stock, stud fees, veterinarian's fees and food. If you can buy him for that amount, consider you bought him at cost, $35 should be the minimum for any well-bred puppy and $50 a fair price.

If you want a show specimen, be prepared to pay considerably more, for, no matter how carefully the dogs are mated or how good the blood-lines, only a few will show prospects.

Remember that in dogs, as in everything else, you get just about what you pay for, and that you may have to buy two or three of the cheapest ones before you raise one.

Health Hints

In bathing your dog don't rush him into the water, put him in slowly, especially if he is a puppy and it is his first bath. The first bath is quite an experience, so be careful and don't frighten him.

Don't use hot water. A dog's bath should be comfortably warm but never hot. Allow him to become accustomed to this new sensation, play with him a few moments before soaping him.

Be careful that you don't get soap in his eyes. It smarts and irritates his eyes just as it does ours. Never use a strong soap. It may irritate the skin and cause skin troubles.

Rinse him well, taking care to get all the soap out of his hair. Rub him well with an old turkish towel and keep him moving, actively exercising until dry. Don't bathe too often. A thorough brushing every few days will keep him clean and a little pine oil will kill the doggy odor making frequent bathing unnecessary.

Training

Teach your dog to refuse food from strangers and not to pick up everything edible he finds. It will keep him from being poisoned.

Have some friends offer him food in your presence and when he attempts to take it command him to "drop it" and slap him lightly. Now, I mean lightly; just enough to show him you are displeased. Keep this up until he will refuse to take it. Now have someone offer it to him when you are out of sight, but where you can watch him. If he starts to take it, come upon him with a rush and reprimand him. The severeness of this reprimand will depend entirely on the disposition of the individual dog. Use your best judgment here.

Before you take him for a walk, have a friend throw several pieces of meat or something else your dog likes, along the path you are going to take. Don't do this yourself as it will carry the scent of your hands. As you walk along this route and he very naturally picks up the bait, scold him and reprimand him as his particular disposition demands. Some dogs only need a scolding, others must be punished lightly and some more severely. Try to get him to do as you want with a minimum of punishment. Before you punish him at all, be absolutely certain he understands exactly what you want him to do or not to do. Make sure you are not at fault in that you haven't put your idea across to him.

Queries

Q. My puppy has hiccoughs every day or so. Is this an indication of digestive trouble?

A. No, puppies have hiccoughs for no apparent reason.

Q. What is meant by in-breeding? Is it advisable?

A. Inbreeding is the mating of relatives such as, father to daughter, mother to son, etc. It is practiced extensively by veteran breeders and a lot of our champions are the result, but the novice should get expert advice before doing any inbreeding.

Q. My dog eats all sorts of filth. What can I do to break him of this and what causes him to do it.

A. The reason for this vice has never been satisfactorily explained. Punish him when you catch him in the act and underfeed him rather than overfeed. Include salt in his food.

Q. I want to buy a puppy for my two boys, one is four, the other two years old. What breed would you suggest? It must be a small dog as I must keep it in the house.

A. For children the age of yours you must get a breed that will stand a lot of mauling, etc. There are a number of breeds suitable, but my preference would be, a Scottish Terrier, a Cocker Spaniel or an English Bull.

Q. Is there a breed known as the American Water Spaniel? If so, will you describe it?

A. Yes, although not a recognized breed, the American Water Spaniel was very popular from about 1880 to 1900. They are always brown, and weigh from 35 to 40 pounds. The coat is short, thick and curly, resembling that of a Chesapeake Bay and like the Chesapeake they are wonderful retrievers and will work in icy water all day.

Intelligence System's Value Taught by War

Importance of Adequate Service Learned by U. S. in 1917-18, When Nation Was Forced to Depend on Allies.

One of the most valuable lessons the United States learned from the World War was the importance of an adequate military intelligence system. At the outbreak of hostilities our "Secret Service" consisted of a handful of trained intelligence officers and field personnel, whose training and equipment facilities were pitifully inadequate to cope with the ingeniously organized espionage and counter-espionage system of even the least progressive European countries.

During the entire period of the World War—despite our frantic efforts to expand our own intelligence system—we were dependent on the British and French intelligence divisions for most of our information regarding enemy activities.

Obviously, there is much information which cannot be released for publication, but even a surface description should convince the most skeptical that the gentle art of wholesale slaughter is as precisely regulated as a Swiss movement watch.

War's Glamour Less Potent.

Much of the romantic glamor of war has disintegrated since the advent of indiscriminate bombings and poison gas; and, as the efficiency in death-dealing paraphernalia gradually has increased, the intelligence divisions have by the same token extended the scope of their operations.

The Nation has marveled at the efficiency of the "G-Men" in combating crime, yet in the event of war the entire Department of Justice would be but one section of the military intelligence.

J. Edgar Hoover, a colonel in the reserve military intelligence, adds the vast facilities of the Department of Justice to the highly sensitized personnel of the intelligence training staff. The course in the various subjects necessary properly to train a secret agent is made fascinating by problems and procedure of intercepting and decoding communications being accomplished under actual war-time conditions.

There are approximately 200 small groups and organizations in existence which make an intensive, unofficial study of military intelligence.

In addition to invisible inks, codes, cryptic drawings and other subterranean methods of obtaining and conveying information, our science has evolved almost unbelievable devices for secretly transmitting knowledge of enemy activities. Paradoxically, science has also made it possible to penetrate the veil of invisibility. Chemical solutions, infra-red lamps, the ultra-violet ray, the fluoroscope, plus expert cryptography, are just a few of the things used in modern intelligence routine.

The human equation, however, continues to be the unknown factor and, consequently, psychology plays an important part in the training of secret agents for service in the field. As a certain retired officer, who was with an intelligence division during the war, puts it, "as long as there are adventurous men and beautiful women in the world, they will continue to put erasers on lead pencils, because somebody is sure to make a mistake—and for a secret agent one mistake spells finis."

Cornered Agent Deadly Prey.

Counter-espionage is the most dangerous phase of secret service operations. When an enemy agent is cornered, he or she will kill with very little compunction, so the embyronic secret agent in addition to using his brain must also undergo an intensive course in the use of specially constructed weapons, such as sword canes, guns concealed in fountain pens, ammonia pistols and other unique death-dealing devices.

However, if any one has ever invented an effective defense against the eternal feminine, the process has never been patented. Scores of "M. I." organizations all over the world learned all there was to know about women spies before the World War. The only trouble was that they learned about women from men!

They received a post-graduate course later from Fraulein Doktor, Mata Hari, Alice Dubous, Leonie Van Houtte, Irma Staum, and countless other mistresses of intrigue. The value of the service rendered their respective countries by these women—some of whom sacrificed their lives—will probably never be computed, as many of their most important exploits have been lost in the maze of ensuing events. But espionage records reveal that hundreds of thousands of lives depended upon the information they obtained.

The most glamorous of these women spies was Mata Hari, (her name means "Eye of the Morning") who was credited with almost uncanny espionage feats and considered by the Allies to be more dangerous than a division of men. Following her profession as art interpreter of Oriental dances, she was the center of Parisian night life and surrounded constantly by high ranking officers of the Allied nations.

On trial for her life, she was charged, among other things, with having caused the sinking of the 14 French transports in the Mediterranean. The testimony purported to show that she had transmitted the sailing dates of the doomed transports to captains of German U-boats operating in the area where the ships were lost. The French records do not show how she learned of these sailing dates, although she was convicted of the charge.

There were dozens of high-ranking officers enamored of the fascinating Javenese dancer, and obviously, one or more of them—unwittingly perhaps — betrayed the sailing dates and sent thousands of men to their deaths. Awaiting execution, Mata Hari told her guards: "I do not regret anything that has happened; I would rather live a short life filled with thrills and adventure than exist indefinitely in a drab, purposeless existence."

Mata Hari was executed at the Polygone at Vincennes on October 15, 1917. Her real name was Margaret Gertrude McLeod (nee Zell). Although she was a strikingly beautiful woman, when the crashing rifle volley sped the white hot bullets into Mata Hari's breast, thus sending her into eternity, the allied secret service breathed a little freer.

All Countries Deny the Obvious.

Despite repeated denials every country in the world is constantly training secret agents by the most advanced scientific methods. When the agent is finally assigned to active service as far as official recognition is concerned he ceases to exist. A government will spend a small fortune to train a secret agent, but the moment he or she goes into active service he becomes the proverbial lone wolf. In the event of capture, the spy is a person without a country, as his own nation repudiates him in the interest of the entire service.

The agent may be assigned to act in the capacity of "double spies"—that is, to offer their services to another country and ostensibly gather information for that particular country, while in reality working for their own government. When the counter-espionage discovers a "double spy" it permits the agent to continue to operate by "feeding" he or she false data to clutter up the other country's intelligence files with misinformation.

Anticipating war, a country may send secret agents to reside in a country which is certain to remain neutral, thereby providing "cover addresses" which serve as "relay stations" for the intelligence when war is declared. These "relay stations" are particularly valuable in getting information through enemy lines in the form of apparently innocent advertisements inserted in the neutral country's newspapers.

Although the field agents receive a general course in military intelligence, the personnel at "HDQ" are highly trained specialists. The experts operate in sections which are interdependent and results are coordinated into a composite whole; the net result being termed intelligence.

Practically all countries use the same secret service system. The military intelligence—or, as it is termed the "M. I."—is divided into four sections: propaganda and counter-propaganda, espionage and counter-espionage. The propaganda and counter-propaganda section of the "M. I." in the various countries are engaged in a continual game of "psychological chess," using the emotions of the people as pawns. One section tells them a certain story through various channels and another section counters with the exact antithesis.

In war time, rumors which apparently start from nowhere are in reality cleverly concocted propaganda and counter-propaganda. Since a person's state of mind affects that person's ability to perform his or her allotted work, rumors of impending catastrophe, or treason in their own ranks, prevents people from attaining and maintaining maximum efficiency in the production of products which are vitally necessary to carry on a war.

The training of secret agents is more complicated than any college course, and those who teach the basic principles of military intelligence can only be classified as geniuses.

Great Britain had her Lawrence of Arabia, and Germany had her Wassmuss, both of whom are historically credited with well-deserved fame. But there is a genius of espionage who is still living of whose activities during the World War comparatively very little is known.

This woman is Germany's celebrated Fraulein Doktor. Lacking the glamour which brought Mata Hari fame, and eventually caused her capture and death, Fraulein Doktor, operating inconspicuously, kept the German intelligence supplied with trained secret agents. She is sometimes referred to as the "Fagin of espionage," because of her propensity for training spies. Her "spy school" was located at 10 Shoonbeke Fishpond street, in Antwerp. The school contained a complete set of maps, replicas of the various types of war ships, models of tanks, and many ingenious devices for ascertaining and transmitting information. Her staff included expert cryptographers and professors of languages and chemistry. She trained her agents with Teutonic thoroughness, and personally drew up the rules the agents should learn and adhere to when they were released for active duty. She ruled with an iron hand, and, it is a matter of record that her agents were more afraid of Fraulein Doktor than they were of the Allies.

It is a tribute to the genius of the woman that in every instance where a spy has been apprehended while actively engaged in espionage, that the agent betrayed himself or herself by violating some rule that the fraulein had devised. Her real name is Elsbeth Schragmueller. She is an authentic doctor of philosophy, having received her degree at the University of Freiberg in 1913. Today, "Fraulein Doktor" lives quietly in Munich, and although 17 years have passed since the close of the World War, her slightest activity is noted with interest by more than one secret service. They have learned about women from women!

Aside from the gigantic task of obtaining information of enemy activities and preventing enemy agents from relaying information to their own headquarters, the "M. I." is also charged with the responsibility of preventing sabotage. A single error in this section means loss of life and partial or total destruction of important war-material producing centers. There are a multitude of methods used to cripple an industry, and knowledge of how to circumvent these methods is a vitally important part of intelligence training.

Another important phase of intelligence is censorship. Chance phrases in letters from the "front" may disclose to trained eyes troop morale, food shortage, health conditions, and other important bits of information which, when pieced together at headquarters, forms a fairly accurate mental picture of conditions in the ranks of the opposing nation.

The method of procedure in modern intelligence operations is similar to the construction of a gigantic cross-word puzzle. Thousands of tiny fragments of information filter into headquarters from numerous sources. A specially trained staff sifts the wheat from the chaff and determines which information is authentic and which is uncertain. This is termed evaluation. When the information has been tested by a check-and-double-check system, it is then relayed to the proper place as intelligence.

Radio Upsets Many Methods.

Radio perfection has revolutionized international intelligence operations. The old, obsolete method of transmitting warnings to troops in advance positions was responsible for the interception of messages which might have turned defeat into victory. Here is the way it is accomplished today: After the information of enemy activities has been obtained and forwarded to headquarters, it is decoded or deciphered and evaluated; then the resulting intelligence is ready to be transmitted to that ship, or to those divisions in the field which the information concerns. In a huge room, whose walls are covered with maps studded with thousands of colored pins denoting the position of the various divisions in action, air bases, and operating areas of naval battle squadrons, the radio intelligence transmits the messages in codes.

Although government systems have many more ramifications, the procedure of contacting the army in the field or ships at sea is practically the same as the system used by the various police departments for contacting their radio scout cars. For instance, police headquarters may broadcast as follows: "Calling car number 27 . . . calling car number 27 . . . go to First and Main streets . . . hold-up in jewelry store . . . take no chances . . . that is all." Similarly the radio intelligence may broadcast: "Calling Gold 9-B . . . calling Gold 9-B . . . baromter falling . . . slight rainstorms with probable high winds." The intelligence in the field using the code "9-B" designated in the message, decodes the message to read, "Enemy moving up reserve divisions . . . prepare for attack . . . wind drafts indicate gas may be used." The call letters designating various units in the field as well as the codes are constantly being changed to render interception as difficult as possible.

The radio intelligence also concentrates on detecting and locating unauthorized radio stations and extraordinary powerful "sending sets." This is termed "tracing" by radio engineers, who have in turn evolved a system whereby the search for the "outlaw set" can be narrowed down to a very small circle.

In the recent revolutions in Cuba, the Cuban government sent to the United States for radio engineers to locate a hidden radio station which was being used to inflame the populace. The Cuban students who had set up the station, however, had foreseen the possibility of their broadcasting apparatus being located by scientific means and had mounted the delicate instrument and all the necessary electrical equipment on a motor truck. One of the radio engineers who was engaged in the search laughingly told me, "We chased those damn kids all over Cuba and when we did finally catch up with them the revolution was over."

In intercepting and decoding radio messages a phonographic record is made. The record is then played until the message is decoded. Musical compositions may reveal a hidden meaning when subjected to intense study by "music code" experts. The notes of the composition when transposed form letters which may be woven into a code message, thereby making it necessary to use two different processes to extract the cryptic meaning from the message.

Agents Serve Function of Eyes.

War drums in Europe are beginning to rumble ominously. From the blistering heat of the tropics to the frozen solitude of the far north, armed men patrol the borders of their countries; warships bristling with mighty guns guard the world's harbors; airplanes are ready to take off at a moment's notice and scatter death and flaming destruction on congested cities, but without the various intelligence divisions they would be like deaf and blind men groping in the darkness of internal intrigue, treachery and sabotage.

More than 700 spies have been apprehended during the past two years in European countries. Some of them were professional spies who sold information to the highest bidder. Others were patriots, regardless of the fact that their own governments could not officially recognize them as such. Many of them were only stupid intermediaries of professional spies who practically committed suicide when they attempted to match wits with the trained secret service.

In every war, spies have played an important part, and as history repeats itself, future wars will revolve in an orbit of scientific military intelligence. Patriotic men and women will fight their mental battles behind the lines with the same courage the soldier displays on the field of battle.

No uniforms, bands or cheering crowds will be at the station to see them off. War may bring honor and glory to some, but to the secret agent it brings only the remote possibility of being permitted to retire in peace when the echo of the last gun has died away, or, a blank wall—and a firing squad.

Credit System Is Great Aid ToUrban Home

Building and Loan Unit Lists Main Sources of Financing.

Some 940,000 one-and-two family urban homes have been done over with the use of credit in the past year and a half during which special emphasis and special loan arrangements have been used to supplement established sources of funds for remaking homes. About one out of every 14 non-farm residences in the country has thus been reconditioned.

This estimate comes from the United States Building and Loan League, which lists three main sources of the $365,000,000 of credit making possible this "better homes movement" among the property owners, and the attendant building trades employment.

Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the league, the national organization of the savings, building and loan business in explaining this study, stresses the fact that only structural repairs and improvements have been included in the estimate, and the FHA modernization loan figures have thus been adjusted for inclusion in this estimate.

"We do not count every family which installed a new heating system or a new refrigerator as having reconditioned its home," he pointed out. "In these 940,000 odd houses which we estimate to have been the object of some expenditure on the part of the family since September, 1934, the roof, cellar, outside walls, inside walls, floors or ceilings, attics or some non-detachable part of the house has been replaced or repaired."

The three sources of credit listed as providing for these repair and reconstruction endeavors are the savings, building and loan associations and co-operative banks; the banks and finance companies using the FHA modernization credit plan; and the reconditioning division of the Home Owners Loan Corporation..

"Each of these three has dealt with a different type of repair and reconstruction loan, in the main," commented Mr. Bodfish. "The Home Home Owners Loan Corporation, of course, has confined itself to advances providing for reconditioning on homes where the corporation has taken over the mortgage from some other financing agency. These are cases where no private lending agency could be expected to grant credit, and thus the HOLC's reconditioning operations have filled a decidedly important place in the program. They have represented minor expenditures in the main, the average job contracted for under this arrangement being reported by the corporation as $193.98. This source of credit accounts for 345,812 of the houses which have been 'done over' and has provided $65,587,940 to take care of these projects to date.

Average Loan $930.

"The 11,000 savings, building and loan associations under both Federal and State charter have provided funds for the making over of some 160,000 homes. Their average loan is around $930, demonstrating that the reconditioning which has to do with structure of the house, the enlargement of the home by the addition of rooms, and similar job-making activities which call for longer-term real estate credit of the type customarily provided by these associations, is still being financed by them. Close to $150,000,000 in such reconstruction loans have been placed on the association's books in the last year and a half.

"The banks, commercial and industrial, and the finance companies which have extended credit for home repairs under the insurance plan embodied in Title I of the National Housing Act have been the source of home reconditioning money for about 435,000 homes. This figure is lower than the total reported by the FHA in its second annual report, because their figure includes not only urban residential properties but commercial and other kinds of property, and their figure on number of homes and multiple residential units improved includes some 48 per cent plumbing and heating equipment installations, which do not strictly come within the limits of our study here. The average amount of loan from one of these sources is $345. Thus it appears that the type of reconditioning financed here is the smaller job of shingling the roof, putting on paint, redecorating the interior, reflooring the porch, chinking up flaws in the foundation concrete, and the like. Making the same adjustments for the volume of FHA credit as we did above in the number of their loans, it develops that about $150,000,000 of credit has been extended to provide for these smaller items in the remaking of American homes."

Mr. Bodfish said that one of the most satisfying features of all this credit extended to make-over American homes is that each of the financing institutions is requiring monthly repayments on the indebtedness, so that orderly liquidation of the debt is being provided for.

Garage Addition Is Place to Putter

Almost every man and many women love a place in which to putter. Usually the only place available is some dark corner of the cellar, where little or no daylight penetrates and where tools rust in the summer when the furnace is out. It is not a pleasant place to work, and consequently after a few weeks the discomforts and inconveniences to be overcome outweigh the yearning to putter. So the puttering ceases. The yearning never entirely disappears, however, and always there is that hope that some day a pleasant place will be provided and the building of ship models or whatnots or twisting iron into candle sticks can be resumed.

So, if you are building a new garage, add a few feet to it and there is the place to putter. A light partition can be built so that in winter, if the garage is unheated, either an electric heater or a small kerosene heater may be used. Most kerosene heaters are approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters for use in garages, so they are safe.

In such a room there will be plenty of daylight, and the electric wiring can include provision for sufficient plugs to run a couple of small motors for lathes or scroll saws or other equipment.

Two-Shaded Doors Add to Decoration

Delightful and interesting effects can be developed by painting paneled doors in two shades. The stiles and rails may be one shade and the panels another, or merely the moldings around the panels can carry the contrasting color.

Doors whose panels are flat without any raised beveled surface in the center may be made very decorative by painting the panel a contrasting color and then planting a narrow molding around where the edge of the beveled plane would ordinarily come; this is painted like the frame of the door and stands out from its darker background.

The colonial colors made popular by the recent rebuilding of Williamsburg, Va., serve nicely for this type of painting.

Vermonters Seek Florida Mortgages

Miami, Fla. — Representatives of the Burlington Savings Bank of Burlington, Vt., are here completing plans for the purchase of insured mortgages in this area.

They have announced that their institution has several million dollars available for these mortgages and that they have already purchased mortgages in the approximate amount of $200,000 from a local mortgagee.

They have offered local lending institutions an outlet at par for any Federal Housing Administration insured mortgages covering properties in this area.

Second Living Rooms Advised By FHA Heads

Basements, Attics or Guest Rooms May Be Used for Remodeling.

Every family can find good use for a second living room. With the popularity of home entertainment, which has grown considerably in recent years, many home owners are turning any possible space into another gathering place for the family.

Basements, attics, large halls or unused guest rooms are being converted to practical use. Funds for this purpose may be obtained under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration. The Housing Administration lends no money, but funds are advanced by banks or other private financial institutions which hold a contract of insurance with it.

Much has been said and written about the type of apartment known as a recreation room for basement or attic, but if this seems too frivolous for your family's taste there is no reason why an ordinary living room cannot be created in either of these places. The market is flooded with materials with which rooms of this type may be easily constructed.

One home owner whose family's inclinations ran to bridge, monopoly and other such games, built a living room in a corner of the basement of his home. It was completely shut off from the furnace and laundry tubs and could be reached directly from the outside or from the kitchen stairs.

Fire-resistant composition board was used for the walls and ceiling, completely hiding pipes and other cellar equipment. A composition covering was also laid over the basement cement floor and a fireplace was built, with bookcases on either side. The cellar windows, high up in the walls, were finished in an attractive manner. The entire house was air-conditioned.

The general effect was a paneled room in the early American manner. Furnishings were bought with the family's own funds and were in keeping with the character of the room. A large table holds a lamp and magazines and offers space for a game of solitaire or mother's new dress patterns.

Comfortable chairs with reading lamps and convenient tables with attractive accessories completed the room's furnishings.

Building Program Held Boom to Dallas Jobless

Rapidly decreasing unemployment is occurring in the Dallas district, reports L. R. Taylor, president of the Dallas Central Labor Council, in the Dallas (Tex.) Morning News. All labor unions, he said, have many more members working than was the case six months ago. Membership in the unions is increasing, and there is a good demand for skilled craftsmen at better wages. Dallas' current building program, Mr. Taylor said, is largely responsible for the increase in employment.

Floods Don't Slow Consumer Outlay

Consumer spending in retail and wholesale markets continued at the best rate in five years last week, according to the Dun & Bradstreet Weekly Business Review.

The summary explained that the volume expanded in spite of floods and rainstorms, though in all districts weather conditions tended to curtail retail distribution. Women's and men's apparel, house furnishings, electric refrigerators, radios, hardware, paints, etc., continued substantially to boost total sales, the review states. A gain of up to 20 per cent in total sales was noted.

MEN

If you really knew what this business has meant to other men, you would not pass up this ad as "just another one of those propositions." If you do, you are in all probability missing what, to a great many men, has been the opportunity of a life-time. No matter what your present income is, no matter what your position in life, you ought to be sincere in your desire to improve it, to increase your income to properly provide for your family and give them the better things in life and to get into a permanent business of your own.

We have such an opportunity for you right now. Men in this business from all walks of life are big earners right here in Washington and nearby towns. When they learn this profitable business thoroughly, their incomes range around $2,000, $4,000, $6,000 and more per year. (Would you like to meet and talk to men who make from $4,000 to $6,000 per year? Would you like to go with these men and actually SEE them make that kind of money? If you are a good worker, sincere and deeply interested in making money, we will introduce you to these men and leave you free to question them at length. When your two days of training is completed you can go with them and see how they work.)

Our company is rapidly approaching in this country the complete dominance of the market it has already secured in other countries, with five European and American factories continuously busy supplying our product. 1935 was our sixth consecutive record sales year.

Beginners may have to get along temporarily on $100 to $150 per month. However, you are placed on the same basis of compensation as the others and make no investment or deposit of any kind. If you are selected for this opportunity, you will be given complete training at our factory branch at no expense to you. We will teach you this business, help you to real and permanent success, and will not ask you to make any investment.

This opportunity is open to you NOW because of the ever-increasing demand for our product. If you are between the ages of 25 and 50, are willing to work and study conscientiously to secure success and large earnings possible in this business, this opportunity concerns you.

We are sincere in offering it to you, and you will find that 20 minutes spent in an interview with us will be the most valuable 20 minutes you ever invested. For a personal interview, apply at 1010 Vermont Ave. N. W., Suite 205, Monday morning at 10 o'clock sharp.

Fourth Grade Pupils at Peter Force School Build Viking Hall, Thrill to Telling Sagas

Travel In Geography Finds All Interested

Jerry Hancock, One of Group's Ablest Historians, Explains Importance of "Rough Men's" Spears, Swords and Shields.

By Jay Walz.

Fourth graders at Peter Force School don't cater much to generalities.

They're not interested, apparently, in lessons about theory, or problems in the abstract. They want to get down to cases. Even story-telling, in the broad sense, doesn't catch their fancies. Narrow the field and talk of particular kinds of stories—sagas, for example. And you have their eyes, ears and time, including that which they should be taking for lunch.

And story-tellers have to be sorted out, too. Put your bed-time story man over here (where our fourth graders can promptly forget him), and make way for a real narrator—the skald, yes, skald, s-k-a-l-d.

The skalds spun sagas.

When? Where? And why?

That's what this energetic class of force boys and girls want to talk about. They know the answers so well, they'll make your head swim telling you.

You see, they started out four or five weeks ago on a trip to Norseland. Like the Vikings of old, they plundered all the books they could find of any information, or stories, about these bold folk, who ran the seas at will 1,000 or so years ago.

Set of Floor Plans.

With the aid of their teacher, Mrs. J. M. Schmitt, they found a set of floor plans for an old Viking hall—a spaciuos room around a central fireplace. The warriors lounged here, drank mead and sang their songs. The halls were great places, at one end of which there was usually a high seat where sat the head of the Viking band, and his lady.

There was much of the atmosphere of a present-day club in these old Norse halls. There was just one thing lacking—magazines and newspapers to read. Even the Vikings, it seems, couldn't lay their hands on these articles of reading matter that are now so common. Nevertheless, during the long winter months when the snows and the cold made plundering impossible, and they met in their community hall, they did receive news of the outside world. Moreover, it came, accompanied by very colorful musical setting.

That is where the skalds come in. Traveling minstrels they were, really. They bounded the snowy roads from village to village—from hall to hall—with a harp on their backs, and all the current events in their head. Whatever news he had to tell, it was joyful tidings wherever he went, and great was the excitement when the skald stepped before the high seat to sing of battles won in far-off places.

It was one of these halls, and the life that went with it that our fourth grade set out to reproduce. Why?—they had run across Norway in a geography lesson, for one thing, and for another, they came to a chapter about the Vikings in history. And they just got interested.

Orange Crates Chairs.

First an electric light bulb covered with red paper and a few pieces of stove wood became the central piece in the hall, which grew along one side of the class room. Then the heaviest table in the school was hauled in for a dining and drinking board. Orange crates, one of the most useful of classroom raw materials, became chairs and the high seat.

Artists went to work on appropriate wall hangings. The boys concentrated on spears, swords, shields and a few axes. The girls helped on the helmets and wigs. The Vikings, you remember, were great blonds. The girls decided they could get the best effect in wigs by combing out strands of hemp from pieces of rope brought to class.

Pottery makers molded mead bowls out of clay, and the painters touched them up with bright colors. Others manufactured papier-mache with which to make the huge drinking horns. About all that wasn't made was the mead, itself.

So much for the physical construction of the hall. Of course, that isn't all there was to the project. The boys and girls were mapping courses of action. They planned some great sessions in the Viking hall. So while the craftsmen were working on the setting, the mythologists poured over the books of old Norse tales.

Able Historian.

Among these is Jerry Hancock, whose thoroughly American name doesn't prevent him from being one of the ablest historians on the Viking period in Force School. He lay down his harp (home-made) the other day long enough to tell us some of the facts without benefit of melodic background.

"You see," he started out, explaining the importance of the spears, the swords, the shields, "the Vikings were rough men. They were warriors—not because their country was at war. They fought for a living. Plundering was their main occupation. They had to get out in the summertime and fight for enough provisions to keep them and their families next winter."

Jerry said they sometimes fought neighbors, but more often put out to sea and sailed for foreign shores.

"You may have heard about one of the most famous of the Vikings," continued our historian, who, if you haven't guessed it, is the class skald, "Leif Ericson. He was about the bravest man they ever had—came to America, you know.

"Only he didn't call it America. He called it Wine Land, because his men found so many grapes growing here.

"Funny thing about that trip of Ericson's, though. We can't find where he ever fought with the Indians. And the men had sailed so long looking for a battle, too."

Nevertheless Ericson took back to his countrymen material for one of the most famous sagas ever written, and the skalds had the time of their lives, so Jerry says, for the next season or so.

Brilliant Wall Pieces.

Mrs. Shmitt says just about everyone in her class has had something to do with the Viking project. The history students, of course, have had their chance. The geographists have learned all about the topography of Norway and Sweden, which grew out of the land of the Vikings. The painters, as we mentioned, created appropriate and brilliant wall pieces.

Even the dancers have been busy and have on occasion come to the assistance of Skald Jerry Hancock in furnishing entertainment for the class.

The poets have not been idle. They worked out a Viking song. And when it was done the musicians set it to music.

McKinley Plans Blossom Time Japanese Fete

Although Washington's cherry blossom committee has called off plans for festivities this year, McKinley High School students went ahead with their contribution to the annual civic affair—a production of Gilbert and Sullivan's operetta, "The Mikado"—Friday and Saturday nights. The operetta's characters, like the cherry trees, are Japanese.

McKinley singers and actors brought to life once more the score of now famous characters, Yum-Yum, Pitti-Sing, Nanki-Poo and the others.

Frank Numbers, who already has starred in two Gilbert and Sullivan operas, had his third role, as Nanki-Poo.

Yum-Yum, the leading feminine role, was interpreted by two young singers, Wilor Maxwell and Margaret Williams. The part of Pitti-Sing was also divided between two girls, Marianna Brumbaugh and Anna Galbraith.

The title role of "The Mikado" was played by Alex Stabler. Robert Racoosin, another leading singer in the Tech Opera Club, sang the comic lead of Ko-Ko, lord high executioner.

The tremendously successful showing of McKinley's 1936 edition of "The Mikado" was fully reflected by the attendance to the two presentations, on Friday and Saturday nights. Mrs. Ada Coe and Dore Walton directed.

Since McKinley was the first high school to produce an opera, the regular yearly opera productions have found a major place in the school activities.

7 Will Contest Eastern High's Oratory Finals

Five-minute speeches have been prepared by the contestants, who have spent the last several days perfecting their delivery. Thursday night they will be presented by Wayne Kniffin, president of the February graduating class.

The speakers, in order of their appearance, are listed here with their subjects:

Leslie Bowers, "Abraham Lincoln's Place in Litreature;" Robert Clements, "The Why and Wherefore of Boulder Dam;" Lorraine Coyle, "The World Court: Its History and Operation;" David Fegan, "Our Latin American Neighbors;" Charles Gastrock, "John Marshall and the Constitution;" Betty Stevenson, "The TVA: Its Importance Possibilities;" and Beveridge Thomas, "Science's Aids to Modern Civilization."

The judges will be: Miss Ruth Stauffer, head of the English department; Frank Suter, former head of the Eastern department of chemistry, and Fred W. Pimper, of the Commercial National Bank.

The prizes are being furnished by the school's nine fraternities and sororities.

Music will be furnished by the School Orchestra, directed by Mrs. C. V. Byram and Paul D. Gable.

Americanizers to Mark Naturalization Advance

Col. MacCormack, Immigration Commissioner, to Be Honored for Work in Improving Citizenship Standards.

Recognizing an important step in the advancement of American naturalization service, the Americanization School Association of the District of Columbia is planning a celebration May 7 at the Washington Hotel.

The central figure of the affair will be Col. Daniel W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. Through his efforts, the association feels, important progress has been made in the improvement of citizenship standards throughout the United States.

Mrs. Roosevelt to Attend.

Col. Frederic A. Delano, president of the association, has charge of arrangements. Among the speakers and guests will be Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas; Mrs. Kenneth F. Rich, of Hull House, Chicago, and Dr. Joseph P. Chamberlain, of Columbia University. Souren H. Hanessian vice president of the association, is assisting Col. Delano.

A feature will be the presentation of the "Basic Principles of the Government of the United States," a document recently drawn up by Col. MacCormack, outlining the relationship of the individual citizen to his Government, and explaining the organization of the Government.

The "principles," are part of a citizenship program made effective January 1, by the Department of Labor. The Department hopes to make citizenship proceedings more uniform, and at the same time to make the new citizen's appreciation of his adopted Government more complete.

The whole program is the outgrowth of two years of study, not only on the part of Col. MacCormack but also of a corps of expert assistants, whom he drafted to the job. He started out with an examination of the procedure men and women from other countries have been asked to follow as they become citizens of the United States.

Lists Questions.

He asked these questions:

1. Are the requirements for citizenship in the various district of this country in harmony with the general naturalization law?
2. Are they uniform?
3. What is the standard by which fitness for citizenship in this country should be measured?
4. What qualifies an examiner to decide whether or not a petitioner is ready for citizenship?

To answer these questions the commissioner planned his general program. He first chose a group of 30 leaders in adult education interested in naturalization service.

One of these was Maude E. Aiton, director of Americanization work in Washington, who is also treasurer of the District Americanization School Association.

Of course, the legal requirements for naturalization are basic. They require ability to speak English and to sign his own name; an attachment to the principles of the Constitution, and good moral character. Col. MacCormack's program begins on that foundation, and strives to "assist the worthy applicant in meeting the educational tests and in acquiring the broader education needed to fit him to exercise effectively the duties and privileges of a citizen; and to make it more difficult for the unworthy applicant to escape detection."

According to one section of the "program," applicants will no longer be asked such questions as "How high is Bunker Hill Monument?" in an examination supposed to test them on familiarity with the principles of the Constitution. "Actual familiarity with and attachment to these principles are to be required rather than memorization of facts and phrases."

"It is hoped," the program statement continues, "that this statement of principles, so presented as to convey more than dry instruction, will be made the basis of courses of study in naturalization classes in the public schools. The idea of liberty and democracy embodied in the Constitution have not lost their appeal to the mind and heart, and when explained in understandable terms will command not only acceptance, but inspire that attachment to our fundamental law which the statute requires as a condition of naturalization."

Examiners have been asked to direct candidates to proper officials in the public school systems, and to make clear that "the statutory educational requirements are not sufficient to enable him to derive the full benefit of American citizenship;" and that it will be to his advantage to avail himself of the opportunities offered by the public schools. In this way he may "intelligently exercise the right of franchise and improve his social and economic position in the community."

Ceremonies Arranged.

Field officers have been cautioned to guard applicants for citizenship against "political, financial, and other exploitation."

Appropriate naturalization ceremonies are to be arranged. To surround the act of taking the oath of citizenship with all possible dignity and solemnity, naturalization officers are to co-operate with the courts, public schools, social service agencies, patriotic societies and local officials. The candidate is not to regard his examination as "a dreaded ordeal, but should appear with confidence, born of adequate preparation and the knowledge that he will be judged not on his ability to answer a series of arbitrary questions, but upon his character, his familiarity with and attachment to the principles of the Constitution, and his attitude toward the United States and its institutions.

Col. MacCormack's "Basic Principles" is a detailed discussion of citizenship. He explains such fundamental things as freedom and equality, supremacy of law not of men, democratic government, Constitution, a living document, the Constitution a charter of human rights, protection of the individual and source and beneficiaries of government.

The section devoted to organization of the United States Government is a brief, but thorough, exposition of how the Federal system operates. It closes with specific responsibilities of the new citizen.

"If this program is placed in effect," concludes Col. MacCormack, "'there should be more effective co-operation between all agencies concerned with the problems of naturalization. It will be much more difficult for the unworthy applicant to escape detection, while the worthy applicant will be assisted in meeting the educational tests for naturalization and in acquiring the broader education needed to fit him to exercise effectively the duties and privileges of a citizen."

W. W. Husband is general chairman of the committee arranging the May festival.

George Washington Students Will Hold Conference on World Peace Tomorrow

Boileau and Maverick Are on the Program

University Will Suspend Classes During Sessions; Schwellenbach, William T. Stone, Prof. Wright Will Make Talks.

George Washington University students, with the sponsorship and co-operation of the university, will hold a conference on world peace tomorrow to express student interest in the cause of peace.

The program, as planned by the student committee, will include a general session at 11 a. m., and two group meetings at 5:45 p. m. The university will suspend all classes during the hours of the meetings to enable and encourage all students to attend the discussions.

Prominent speakers interested in the cause of peace but holding divergent views as to the most effective means of maintaining peace will speak at the sessions. Each speaker will be questioned by a student panel following his address.

Boileau Will Speak.

Speakers will include Representative Gerald Boileau, of Wisconsin; Prof. Herbert Wright, of Catholic University; Representative Maury Maverick, of Texas; William T. Stone, of the Foreign Policy Association, and Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach, of Washington.

The program for the day is as follows:

11 a. m.—General meeting, Dean Elmer Louis Kayser, university marshal, presiding. Greeting by the president of the university, Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin. Speech by Representative Boileau, "What Is National Defense?" Speech by Prof. Wright, "The United States' Contribution to World Peace." Student panel: William Goodykoontz, Thomas Gerow, Ross Pope, Frank Brisebois and George Stevens.

5:45 p. m.—Group meeting, Dr. Warren Reed West, professor of political science and assistant dean of the school of Government, presiding. Speech by Representative Maverick, "Will Collective Action Preserve Peace?" Student panel: Charles Haig, Walter Bird, Reba Edelman, Elizabeth Wahl, and Robert J. Doolan.

5:45 p. m.—Group meeting, Dr. William Crane Johnstone, jr., associate professor of political science and dean of the Junior College, presiding. Speech by Mr. Stone, "What is National Defense?" Speech by Senator Schwellenbach, "What is National Defense?" Student panel: Charles Bohannon, Austin Cunningham, Verna Volz, Joseph Jaffe, and John Willard.

Committee Listed.

The committee in charge of the program is composed of Charles F. Kiefer, jr., chairman; Theodore Pierson, George Stevens, William Goodykoontz and Austin Cunningham, of the student body, and dean Elmer Louis Kayser and Dean William Crane Johnstone, jr., of the faculty.

In making official announcement of the convocation, President Cloyd H. Marvin said:

"There is no more challenging problem than the problem of living together. In the decades ahead scholars will give to it the same devoted study that in past decades they have given, through the development of the technical studies and professional training, to mankind's problem of 'getting a living.'

"The self-same laws through which we shall solve the problem of living together are those that will make for understanding and world peace. Because it involves the searching out of these laws, leaders in the universities are especially interested in the problem of peace.

"We all recognize that mob psychology ends in destruction. It leads to a light haste through false impressions, and thence on to lawless error. After the shouting of every battle has died away, men have realized the incompetence of force in the solution of this problem of living together.

"Universities, if they are true to their purpose, must aid in the analysis of this question. But they must function apart from the propaganda of pressure groups. A university is not an instrument of propaganda, and if it is to maintain its integrity, it cannot yield to pressure groups, whether of the right, center or left. The basis of our teaching in the George Washington University is freedom of thought and speech in a democracy, as exemplified through the life of this Nation under its Constitution.

"With these premises in mind, the university is happy to join with its students in the type of conference on world peace that they have organized."

Post's Scholar Tests to Start Next Saturday

160 Students Are Prepared for Campus Finals; 9 Prizes Offered.

Campus finals of the third Washington Post Scholarship Competition will commence Saturday and continue through four successive Saturdays, as 150 picked students, of the contest's District of Columbia and tri-State area, wage final battles for the coveted top prizes of nine 4-year tuition scholarships in Washington universities.

The campus events include the elimination of all candidates from the District of Columbia, scheduled next Saturday at the American University Liberal Arts College. One full tuition scholarship for four years will be captured at that meeting.

On April 18, the American faculty examiners will meet all finalists from the Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia counties included in the contest area. This event will determine the winners of two more full tuition scholarships, one to go to the top candidate from the Virginia counties and the other to the best from the Maryland and West Virginia section. Two half-tuition scholarships will also be awarded to the two students representing the entire area who place immediately below the three sectional winners.

On April 25, finalists from the entire area will meet at Howard University to contend for two scholarships, one offered to the winning girl and the other to the leading boy. Each of these awards is for four years' full tuition, provided the winner maintains an academic record which meets the requirements of the scholarship committee of the Howard Undergraduate Colleges.

On May 2, boys from the entire area will meet on the Georgetown campus in competition for the full four-year tuition scholarship offered by the School of Foreign Service there.

The last meeting is scheduled at the Catholic University of America, where boys from the entire area will compete on May 9 for the full four-year tuition scholarship offered by that institution's College of Arts and Sciences or School of Engineering and Architecture.

Plans are already under way for entertaining as well as examining these groups of ambitious students from the metropolitan Capital area. The mental tests, which will be conducted between 9 a. m. and noon, will include written and oral work on both the general college entrance subjects and the civic issues covered in the original essays with which the candidates won their way into the finals against some 13,000 opponents.

Entertainment programs will be managed by joint faculty-student committees and will include luncheons, sightseeing tours to points of interest in and near Washington, and concluding receptions when winners will be announced and medals presented all contestants by The Washington Post.

St. Patrick's Alumnae Holds Third Reunion

Members of St. Patrick's Alumnae Association held their third reunion mass and breakfast last Sunday. They attended mass at 9 o'clock in St. Patrick's Church, which was followed by breakfast at the Occidental Hotel.

Honored guests included Mrs. Roy Richardson, who spoke on "The Beginnings of St. Patrick's Alumnae;" Mrs. Rieman Chesley, who spoke on the activities of the District Chapter of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, and the Rev. Francis Montgomery, assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church, who made the principal address.

Girl students in local and neighboring high schools, preparatory schools, and convents will be eligible to compete for a $1,200 scholarship which will enable the successful contestant to study for four years at Trinity College.

The announcement of the scholarship, offered by the National Alumnae Association of Trinity College, was made by the local chapter of the association which will conduct the contest in this vicinity. Rules and details of the competition were also made public by the District of Columbia Chapter of Trinity Alumnae.

The scholarship will be named for Sister Raphael, retired past president of Trinity College. It is made possible by the college itself through the co-operation of Sister Berchman Julia, president. She authorized the National Alumnae Association to conduct the scholarship contest and to make the award to the girl receiving the highest grade in competitive examinations.

Mrs. Charles McArdle, of Troy, N. Y., is chairman of the alumnae association's scholarship committee under whose supervision the contest is to be held.

Any girl in this area is eligible to enter the competition provided she shall have completed a high school course or its equivalent by June, 1936.

The local contest will include a written standardized general test, sent out by the national scholarship committee. It will also embrace an oral examination on current problems which will be arranged by the committee. Both tests will be given on April 25. The examinations will be directed by the president of the Washington chapter, or a committee appointed for this purpose.

Girls in the 22 localities where Trinity College has alumnae chapters will be competing for the four-year tuition scholarship. The winners in each area will take the standard college board examinations in June, and the girl receiving the highest rating will be the recipient of the $1,200 scholarship.

In addition, the District of Columbia Chapter is offering an individual prize to the girl who represents this region in the national contest. Announcement of the nature of this award will be made by the local chapter within a few days.

Washington Girls Win Special Honors At Wellesley Fete

Two Washington girls were among those who received special awards at the annual honors' day celebration at Wellesley College last week.

Miss Margaret Lee Ferguson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abner H. Ferguson, of Huntington street northwest, and Miss Barbara Patterson, daughter of Mrs. E. S. Patterson, were designated "Senior Wellesley College Scholars."

Miss Patterson, who has received the award for the second time, attended the National Cathedral School in Washington before entering Wellesley. Miss Patterson, also a former student at the National Cathedral School, entered Wellesley on the freshman honor roll.

The title of Wellesle College Scholar is an honorary award conferred upon juniors and seniors who have maintained a high academic standing throughout their scholastic careers at Wellesley.

Wilson College Essay Contest To Be Memorial

Competition Is Dedicated to Miss MacLear, Once Adviser to Forum.

As a memorial to Dr. Martha MacLean, former adviser to the Wilson Teachers' College modern forum, that group has inaugurated an annual essay contest for students in the school.

Feeling such a memorial would help realize the ideals of Dr. MacLear, who was deeply interested in the teaching of current events, the Forum chose for this year's contest the subject, "How Can America Improve Her Democracy?" The essay is to be not less than 200 words, nor more than 1,000, and is to be submitted by May 15. Four judges will select the winner.

Through the speech improvement program directed by Miss Alberta Walker, the speech recordings and voice tests of about half the freshmen of the college have been made. This program aims to point out mistakes so that corrections can be made early in the students' college career.

Records are made of the voice and then played back to the student, who, with the help of Miss Walker, tries to detect his faults. After the discovery of the faults, corrective measures are begun through the use of exercises and suggestions. Miss Walker directs the students in the use of these, so that students may eliminate speech and voice defects.

The student council sent its president, David Tuple, as representative to the eleventh annual spring conference of the Eastern States Association of Professional Schools for Teachers Thursday, Friday and Saturday in New York. Several of the upper classmen of the college also made the trip to attend the meetings and lectures and to observe teaching methods in New York schools.

Group to Attend Greensboro Event

Local alumnae of Greensboro College, among them Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, plan a trip to the campus of their alma mater for homecoming rites and Founders' Day ceremonies there April 28.

Mrs. Roper will be one of the speakers.

Although not designating the occasion as an inauguration, the committee, working in accord with the trustees, faculty and alumnae association, plans to take special notice of the acceptance of Dr. Luther I. Gobbel of the presidency of the college. Activities will honor Dr. Gobbel, who one year ago became the tenth president of the institution, as well as pay tribute to the memory of men and women who founded and fostered the school nearly 100 years ago.

Both Duckett and Stathes qualified as finalists in previous competitions.

The winner of the competition to be concluded early next month receives a two-year scholarship at the American Academy in Rome, all expenses paid. The scholarship is estimated to be worth $5,000.

Preliminary Contest.

The finalists were selected on the basis of a preliminary contest held at Catholic University two weeks ago. The contestants were locked in a private room for 24 hours and told to work out drawings for a postoffice in a city block at one end of which was to be a civic center and at the other a private hotel.

The other finalists selected from 90 entrants throughout the country are Richard Ayers, of Yale; James W. Breed and Joseph V. Keyes, both of the University of Pennsylvania; Joseph P. Ceruti, graduate student at Princeton, and James M. Hunter and Max O. Urbahn, both of University of Illinois.

Two years ago Robert Weppner, a student of Catholic University, was the national winner, while four years ago George Nelson, who studied for a time at the university, won the scholarship.

Winners Announced.

Winners in the classical studies competition, also announced today, were Walter F. Snyder, of Merchantville, N. J., a graduate of Swarthmore College and now a student at Yale, and Susan M. Savage, of Audubon, N. J., a graduate of Byrn Mawr College and now a student at the University of Pennsylvania. Both will spend two years at the academy in Rome.

In landscape architecture the following three finalists were selected from 20 entrants:

Harold E. Atkinson, of Cleveland, and Robert S. Kitchen, of Dayton, Ohio, both graduates of Cornell, and Joseph W. Langran, of Grand Prairie, Tex., graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

Easter Holiday To Start at C. U.

The Easter vacation period for students at the Catholic University will begin at noon Wednesday, and students will have a week's recess. Classes will be resumed at 8 a. m. April 15 in all schools.

In the meantime, there will be an exhibit of travel books in the Lima Library of the University, which is in Mullen Memorial Building. Included in the exhibit will be a three-volume collection of the voyages of Ramusio, printed in 1563; a volume of the travels of Mendez Pinto, an early Portugese explorer in the East, and several other books of exploration in South America. A facsimile of one of the first maps of the New World, made by Cantino, will also be displayed.

The Rev. Dr. John A. Ryan, professor of moral theology and dean of the school of the sacred sciences at the university, will address the City Club of Cleveland, Ohio, at a luncheon to be held in that city on Saturday. His topic will be "Americanism: The Counterfeit and the Genuine."

The rector's oratorical contest, which is held annually at the university, will take place this year on April 27, according to the announcement of the Rev. Maurice O'Leary, O. P., moderator of the Shahan Debating Club and the Harlequins Dramatic Society, who has charge of the event. In order to allow a longer period for preparation to those who will participate, the preliminary tryouts have been postponed from April 6, as originally announced, until April 17, after the Easter recess.

Last Joint Concert Is Heard at Trinity

The last point concert of the semester was given at Trinity last week by the Glee Club and the Eurydice Club, which collaborated in an attractive program attended by students and guests of the college.

The Glee Club, with 40 girls' voices, rendered several difficult compositions, including Cherubini's "Lo, Morn Is Breaking," and Montani's "Ave Maria."

The Eurydice Club, by which name the college orchestra is known, assisted the Glee Club and also played skillfully Luigini's "Egyptian Ballet," and Borowski's "Adoration."

Piano solos were given by Margaret Gorman and Mary Louise Carmody, and the two music clubs combined in a stirring arrangement of the Trinity Alma Mater Song to complete the program.

The orchestra was directed by Anne Barbara Connor, president of the Eurydice Club, and the Glee Club was directed by Hanora McDonald, student head of that organization.

Plans Completed For Arbor Day At American U.

Dressed in their "most outlandish and preferably the oldest clothes," students of American University will join the faculty in the annual Arbor Day celebration on the campus next Thursday.

Wheelbarrows, shovels, rakes, hoes, picks, lawnmowers and all sorts of "clean-up" tools will be tackled by co-eds and men of the campus in what is expected to prove one of the liveliest as well as one of the most worth-while events of college spring life. Some strange-looking costumes are expected.

A committee, headed by William Thompson, is planning a program designed to outdo the record of last year, when such permanent improvements as a rock garden, a bridge to the campus grotto, rustic furniture at the grotto and landscaping around Hamilton House were finished.

G. U. Brigade To Participate In Army Day

Gen. Craig, Former Hilltop Student, to Review Band and Infantry Units.

Georgetown University's R. O. T. C, band and infantry unit will march in the Army Day parade tomorrow, with Lieut. Col. Raymond O. Barton, of the Third Division, in command.

The parade has a special significance to the Georgetown cadets this year, as Gen. Malin Craig, newly appointed Army Chief of Staff is a former Georgetown man. For six years he attended the Hilltop, starting in the Preparatory School. After two years in the college, he said goodbye to civilian life, and went to the Military Academy.

Participation in military parades in Washington is an old story for Georgetown cadets. In the early days of the college, cadet companies were the regular thing. History records that the first inaugural parade in which cadets from Georgetown took part was that of President John Adams.

After the Civil War military training was discarded, and was not resumed until the World War.

Georgetown men have had the distinction of serving in every major war since the Revolution.

Lieut. W. S. Walker, class of 1841, was the first man to scale the walls of Castle Chapultepec in the Mexican War. Dennis Dowd, class of 1908, carried on the tradition by being the first American on this side of the Atlantic to enlist in the World War. He had been fighting two years with the French Foreign Legion and the Lafayette Esquadrille and he was killed in his plane.

This morning Company C, commanded by Cadet Capt. Vincent F. Beatey, will go to Fort Washington, Md., for a day of military training. The cadets will be transported from the War College aboard the U. S. S. General Rucker.

Women Will Emphasize Need of Underprivileged

Problem of Juveniles of Veterans in Washington Comes First in Consideration, With Effort for All Under Discussion.

Child welfare activities will be emphasized during April by the American Legion Auxiliary, Miss Minnie Mae Hardy, department chairman of the child welfare committee for the department, has announced. The local units will give special attention to planning and developing work for the benefit of the unfortunate children of their communities.

Child welfare is always a continuous activity in the auxiliary but during this month the auxiliary will endeavor to give intensive study to the problem of underprivileged children, to awaken a wider public interest and to develop activities through which the auxiliary can contribute more effectively to its solution.

The first concern of the auxiliary is the welfare of children of veterans and children left without the support of a father because of the war. There are many of these in every community and the number increases daily. The auxiliary will endeavor to assure them all the advantages of American childhood, keeping them in their homes where possible and seeing that they get an education and a fair start in life.

These activities will not be confined to children of veterans alone, but an effort will be made to have the aid reach all unfortunate children. Mrs. Adeline Halloran, department chairman of juniors, suggests that, as this is child welfare month, all juniors tell the senior child welfare chairman of their unit of their plans for this program. Possibly a veteran's family of children will need food, clothing or toys, and Easter baskets will need distributing. Any number of scrap books can be used at Glendale and the Children's Hospital.

The newly organized Junior Glee Club is composed of the following members: Nancy L. Abreo, Margaret Battley, Marie and Peggy Combs, Frances Crozier, Jane and Betty Ellis, Mary J. Gorman, Doris Hamshire, Aelene and Eunice Hougen, Nancy Halloran, Margaret Howell, Jane Ingling, Irene Johns, Eileen and Miriam Long, Margaret May, Geraldine Luther, Mary W. and Claire McCarthy, Mary C. Maloy, Mary McGrath, Centhia McIntire, Lois and Bettie Schaumleffle, Leona Seiders, Vivian Simmons, Bernadette and Viola Smith, Marie Taylor, Mary Thornton, Mary C. Ware, Betty Waters, Betty Prezioso, Shirley Brookshire and Mrs. Zilda Mulvey, accompanist, who is the junior chairman of Nash Unit, No. 8.

Presidents Invited.

Tomorrow will be known as Auxiliary Day and several celebrations, with "victory banquets," will be held with department presidents, past presidents and heads of other women's groups as guests. These affairs will be held throughout the country in every department, and the department in each of the six membership groups showing the highest gain for this objective will receive copies of the auxiliary's National History.

One copy will be presented to the department president and the other copies will be distributed by the membership chairman as special unit awards as follows: Groups 1 and 2, four copies; Groups 3 and 4, three copies, while two copies will be awarded to Groups 5 and 6. All membership to be credited to the drive must be at national headquarters by May 1.

Each department chairman of membership whose department equals or exceeds its highest membership record 30 days prior to the national convention will receive one of these histories autographed by the national president, and each department chairman, together with her unit chairman, has been urged to launch a program best suited to their locality, timing the activities to correspond with the national objectives.

G. P. O. Unit.

The regular monthly meeting of Government Printing Office Unit No. 33 was held Wednesday in the green room of the Government Printing Office, when seven applications for membership and three transfers were accepted.

The unit unanimously indorsed Miss Lillian Reagan for department president for 1937. April 29, the date of the next monthly meeting, has been set by Mrs. Helen Luckritz, Americanism chairman, as the date for the unit's Americanism program, also the date for the visitation from Miss Necie Perril, department president and staff.

Arrangements are being made for a dance to be held Saturday, April 18, to be cosponsored by the post band.

McGroarty Unit.

Stephen P. McGroarty Unit, No. 27, assisted by the post, gave a bingo party at Walter Reed Hospital Saturday evening under the direction of Mrs. Arthur, unit rehabilitation chairman, and Mrs. Gertrude Johnson, post welfare officer. The unit will meet tomorrow evening at the Thomas Circle Club.

The Junior Auxiliary met on Saturday at the home of the junior chairman, Miss Newell, in Falls Church. Miss Margaret Howell, the president, presided. A paper on Poland was read by Miss Jane Ellis.

Miss McGroarty, unit child welfare chairman, was present and spoke.

Grand Knight Considine Announces -- Members of Order Employed in Government Service Here Are Free to Use Clubhouse.

The Knights of Columbus acted with traditional promptness in responding to the call for relief of the many thousands made homeless by the record floods that have brought disaster to New England States, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and Ohio. At a special meeting of the supreme officers, in New York City, March 22, $50,000 was appropriated for emergency relief work.

It has been suggested by Grand Knight Charles J. Considine, of Potomac Council, that grand knights of all councils of the order be asked to advise members of their councils, who are now employed in the Government service, that they make use of the Knights of Columbus clubhouse, which is located in the downtown section of the city. With the invitation comes the assurance of Grand Knight Considine that this is not an attempt to "scalp" out-of-town members for membership in the Washington councils, but an effort to bring them in contact with members of the order, and to provide them with a rendezvous during their hours of recreation.

Grand Knight Harry J. Kane, jr., will preside over an important meeting of Carroll Council on Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

Several Notables Make Reservations for Event

Outstanding Function of Program of Events for Biennial Gathering Which Runs Through April 18; Reception Arranged for Easter Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Average Citizen will have a chance to look at their favorite writers of romance and of mystery when authors from all parts of the country descend upon Washington for the authors' breakfast, to be held at the Willard Hotel on April 13. This event is an outstanding feature in the program of the eighth biennial convention of the National League of American Pen Women, which opens here on Easter Sunday and continues through until April 18.

Not only will there be authors of national note at the table of honor, seated at the right and left of the national president, Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson, but also a good half of the 300 guests seated about the ball room will be women who earn their living by authorship. The advance reservations for the authors' breakfast predict that the Washingtonians' curiosity to see the men and women who entertain them in books and magazines is even greater than ever before. and three new departments to the national organization, which now numbers 3,000 paid up, active members in all parts of the United States, Hawaii and Japan.

Event Is Unique.

Without a doubt the authors' breakfast is unique. Jennie Harris Oliver, of Cache, Okla., writer of the "Moky" stories, which will soon be seen in the movies with Jackie Cooper slated for the lead, will be one of the many guests of honor and give a monologue. A decidedly "leftiest" flavor will be added to the occasion by the presence of Fielding Burke, in private life Mrs. Olive T. Dargan. A Virginian by birth, Radcliffe educated, Fielding Burke has lived in the mountains and mill villages of North Carolina, where she found her inspiration for her two novels, "Call Home the Heart," and "A Stone Came Rolling." The masculine touch will be given by Frederick Lambeck, author of "Best in the Greenwood;" Frank A. Tichenor, publisher of "The Spur," and R. D. W. Connor, United States Archivist. Mrs. Ada Dwyer Russell, literary executrix of Amy Lowell, will interpret two of Miss Lowell's poems; Josephine Beach will give a monologue, and Mrs. Phyllis Fergus Hoyt, of Chicago, national music chairman, is to be in charge of a musical program. Other honored guests for the breakfast include the Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Sze and Mrs. Connor.

A reception at the White House, a prize play dealing with traffic problems, to which the District Commissioners have been invited, announcements of various prize winners in different contests conducted by the league, and the election of officers are other high spots on the full program. The White House reception occurs on Friday afternoon, at 4 p. m., when Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will receive the delegates and members.

The traffic play, "Hospital Romance," written by Eugenia Whyt, of Oklahoma City, will be given on Monday evening, with Miss Tony Sorel and John Mann, local amateurs, in the leading roles of the automobile injured couple who meet in a hospital ward very much banged up. Miss Rose Cohen of the District is actively coaching the play, to be given under the direction of the drama department of which Mrs. Francesca Falk Miller, of Chicago is national chairman.

Among the Writers.

Among the members who will probably be on hand to be greeted by Mrs. Stevenson on Easter Sunday and for the author' breakfast are Martha Ostenso of Minneapolis, Minn., novelist; Mrs. Gordon Brinley, of New Canaan, Conn., author of "Away to the Caspe;" Ada Jack Carver, of Minden, La., who won the Harper's $10,000 prize story contest a few years ago; Audrey Wurdemann, of New York, Pulitzer Prize poetry volume; Allene Corliss, of St. Albans, Vt., short story writer for national magazines; Minnie Mischerosch Schmidt, of Chicago, whose 16-inch figurines representing 400 outstanding women in the world are at Trinity College; Phyllis Moore Gallagher, of Washington, D. C., author of "Lovely Little Fool;" Kate Speake Penney, of Birmingham, Ala., who wrote "Land Poor;" Marion Staples Hall, of Middlebury, Vt., who won the $3,000 Eastman photograph prize; Mrs. H. A. Beach, of Hillsborough, N. H., internationally known composer; and Mrs. Grace Warner Gulesian, of Boston, Mass., friend of Charles Chaplin and composer of note.

Like any other convention, a great deal of interest centers in the nomination of officers on Thursday and the balloting on Friday. The two outstanding contestants for the national presidency are Mrs. Phyllis Fergus Hoyt, of Chicago and New Haven, Vt., and Mrs. Clye Robertson, of New York. The new officers will be announced and installed on Saturday, April 18, when in the evening a reception will be given.

Shoppers From All Walks of Life, Tourists Mingle in the Strange 'Flee Market' of Paris

Everything Imaginable Is Sold in Market Place

How Section Got Name Open to Speculation; Most Heterogenous of Wares Lie Side by Side in Complete and Interesting Disorder.

By Andre Vulliet.

Paris.

Whether you are in quest of a missing buffet handle, a second-hand necktie or a burglar's outfit, you are sure to find what you want at the Paris "Marche aux Puces" or "Flea Market" if you look long enough.

How the "Flea Market" ever came into this lowly cognomen is open to speculation. One story relates, however, that in 1827 King Phillipe IV was torn by so many peddlers of obelisk chips and Nero's fiddle strings who came to his palatial back door, he ordered the peddlers into one spot, and allowed the itinerary merchant to set up business in a series of old Paris shacks without interference, as long as they gave fleas away as premiums with their wares.

• • • •

Directly in front of the Porte de Clignancourt, and located on a few acres of ground once covered by the old Paris fortifications are hundreds of shapeless shacks worthy of any American "jungle." These are made of boxwood and tin signs. For the most part they are inhabited by "flea merchants" or "Zoniers."

On market days the whole front part of the building is opened up, offering to the passerby the richness and diversity of its contents. Articles of value are strewed on the floor in view of the lady of the house, who sits bundled up in an antique chair all primed up with arguments for the prospective customers.

The unfortunate merchants who have elected domiciles elsewhere, or those who are too poor to rent a shanty, generally display their wares on the sidewalk. In fair weather or foul, they stand serenely looking over their wares or attempt to discover what passersby have on their minds as far as purchases go.

Customers belong to every rank of society. M. and Mme. Dupont, of course, are always to be seen. It may be that madame wants a second-hand bed for the guest room. She is there to see every bed in the place and to exercise her persuasive powers on recalcitrant merchants who want more for their merchandise than madame cares to pay. Elegant misses slip from taxis to the muddy lanes, gentlemen "collectioneurs" argue with provincial "Marche aux Puces" merchants over knick-knacks, and plain down-and-outers are there either to buy clothes or to steal them.

It as a far cry from departmental store orderliness to "Marche aux Puces" disorder. Here, everything is anonymous. Although impossible to define, one gets an idea of the diversity of articles when one considers that things in use every hour of the day of one's life are exhibited for sale. The most heterogeneous of these lie side by side in complete harmony.

Exhibited for sale on the same stand one finds dishes, last survivors of sets that were once complete. Unbroken members of large families find a resting place there and cause one to wonder what human nervousness caused their parents to come to a broken end. In shapeless piles are clothes of every variety and to suit every taste. Does the fabric please you, Monsieur? All you have to do is to go inside and you emerge all fitted out in an English tweed with cap to match for the price of $2. If Monsieur is a lover of animals, an unwashed urchin offers him a wheelbarrow full of tiny pups of unheralded race. Once the choice is made from among these, a leash is purchased, and Monsieur feels like a gentleman for very little money.

Every sidewalk display presents most incongruous articles. Two little holy water angels we noticed have been resting on the fat arms of a Chinese Buddha for many months. No one has come forward to take these away from their heathen host. Likewise, a life-size statue of Joan of Arc, patched up, but as good as new, we are assured, has been displaying at the end of her "Fleurs de Lys" flag, a Ford side kerosene lamp of 1917 ancestry and a relic of the A. E. F. When this was brought to the "Merchant's" attention, his reply was almost grandiose: "Ah! but Monsieur, both helped to save France."

If you have a cold coming on, or are suffering from congestion of the lungs, you can buy two dozen vacuum cups complete with their original tampon. You are assured that these have been boiled. The purchase made, your attention is directed to a contraption called a rat catcher "if you should be so unfortunate as to have rats in the house." If not, there is a football for your little son. "Monsieur has not a son? Then it is a little girl." She would appreciate this wonderful fur neck piece once the property of the Baronne X. "How unfortunate, Monsieur has no children?" Then if Monsieur understands something about mechanics, Monsieur may have this music-box for a song. The music-box of course, has been absorbing the rain from the heavens for well nigh two years and no amount of coaxing would ever give it back its musical soul again.

For those suffering from bunions, corns, or just sore feet, there is a wide variety of broken-in shoes. We are told that new shoes are the cause of all these ailments. What is more, new shoes are expensive. You can be shod here for 25 cents, and if the footwear should hurt you have the privilege of coming back for another pair.

It is hard to resist the gastronomically descriptive adjectives of the stout lady across sthe street who runs a "Mussel and French Fried Shoppe." The aroma of boiling herb-crammed mussels and crisp potatoes aiding, you heed the call and elbow your way through greasy gentlemen dining at the counter. Having been warned to beware of "Marche aux Puces" mussels, you just have a glass of wine which gives one time, while looking over the kitchen utensils, to muse on the fact that hunger, like love, is blind.

Standing slightly apart from the others is a scholarly looking Chinaman whose business is peddling and whose wares are neckties, silken scarfs, trick cigarette boxes, and very often drugs. In impossible French, he is deep in conversation with an Arab carpet peddler wearing an American tuke ornamented with a pom-pom. The others are itinerant buyers and a sprinkling of ravenous and unkept "zone" dwellers.

In the midst of this poverty, sedate and out of place, stand a collection of Napoleonic uniforms. True, their braid of gold is a bit tarnished and their epaulettes have slumped down like the dooping mustaches of their former owners. At that they are still proud of their former glory and seem to cast a look of chagrin and understanding to the directoire wigs and to the bustles and wasp-shaped corsets of the "Gay Nineties." On the next stand framed belles of this period, impudently displaying their ankles, smile at the handsome Bond street dummies all decked out in smelly Eskimo furs.

As it is now noon, loaves of bread and bottles of wine appear everywhere as though by magic. As the day is nice, the second-hand furniture man has seated his family on period chairs around a peasant table. Often during the meal he gets up to discuss the merits of a gas stove all the while brandishing a compromisingly sharp knife better to make his arguments sink in.

Little by little the colorful crowd of customers disappear in restaurants and cafes to "break the crust." As radio after radio is turned off, one realizes that a "Blind Men's Orchestra" has been playing all the while. They are now taking their revenge. Everywhere yard loaves of bread are decreasing into feet and inches, while bottles become transparent. A talkative old lady sitting cross-legged in the midst of her wares cries out to a crony between mouthfuls: "Ah, what a life! Not a sou will people spend for good cheap merchandise. After crying my lungs out all morning I will have to return home with my books, stovepipes, dishes, dumbbells and canaries unsold."

So saying, the ancient one calls for her horse and wagon. One is impressed with its gaudy sign on which are painted in deep letters the words: "I pay highest prices for . . ." while her sidewalk sign claims to sell at "lowest possible prices."

Coral Gables Takes On National Aspect

Temporary White House Is There During Visit.

Coral Gables, Fla., April 4.—Social events in Coral Gables assume a national aspect as much of the entertainment centers at the Miami Biltmore, temporary White House while President Franklin D. Roosevelt is on a fishing cruise in the West Indies.

Members of the President's staff include Marvin H. McIntyre, assistant secretary; H. M. Kannee, Miss Roberta Barrows, Miss Dorothy Jones and John L. Cook. Members of the staff have been feted at a number of parties during the week. Among those attending were Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Storm, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Hurd, Mr and Mrs J C. O'Brien and Mrs. Stephen Early.

That the season is definitely lengthened in the South this year is indicated by the vast numbers of spring vacationists who arrived here this week.

The finals of the Florida Year-Round Club's Women's Gold tournament will be played today on the Miami Biltmore course. Mrs. Lawrence Schwab, of New York, is the defending champion and a large gallery is expected to follow the matches.

Ocean City Ready For Easter Crowd

Day to Mark Opening of Season at Resort.

Ocean City, N. J., April 4.—The Easter holidays will bring throngs of visitors to this resort where everything is in readiness for their reception and entertainment. The real inauguration of Easter as an event in Ocean City was when John Weaver, then Mayor of Philadelphia and the guest of the resort, drove the golden spike in the ceremonies attending the dedication and opening of the new boardwalk. Since that time Easter has come to mark the opening of the spring season in Ocean City.

The greens committee of the golf club has left nothing undone to have the course in perfect playing condition and public liveries have horses available for all who find pleasure and exercise in this popular recreation.

Fishermen will be interested and benefited in the decision of Ocean City to join with Atlantic City in building a fishing ground that will be about equally distant from each of the resorts. Work is under way and it is the confident belief of those sponsoring the project the marine growth will have reached a point to make the fishing excellent by late summer. It will be known as the Ocean City-Atlantic City Fishing Bank.

Russian Plane Service.

New York, April 4.—Passenger planes will operate between Leningrad and Moscow, 465 miles, in about three hours, according to A. K. Dawson, director of the Russian travel division of the American Express Company. Planes carrying six passengers will be used. The route will be provided with radio beacons for night as well as day flights. To make the plane service attractive for tourists the fare will be about the same as second class rail fare.

Easter Season Draws Throngs To Boardwalk

Preview of Spring Fashion Parade in Atlantic City Is Planned Today.

Atlantic City, April 4.—The famous boardwalk again moves to the front as "the show window of the preview of the Easter fashion parade." Thousands of women from all sections of the country are here to display their new spring finery.

It has become a tradition, down through the years, with the girls and women of the Nation that the place to be on Palm Sunday and Easter, is Atlantic City's Boardwalk and since way back in the early '90's, the holiday period has found the crowd on the promenade setting the styles in women's wear for the following three months.

The year will be no exception and hotel reservations for Palm Sunday and Easter week are far in advance of those for any similar period since 1928.

To pay fitting tribute, and to make sure milady will not feel her outfit has gone unnoticed, the resort will again select the "fifty best-dressed women on the boardwalk." This event will be staged on Palm Sunday only this year. In 1935 it was tried on both Palm Sunday and Easter but is was found that on the latter day it was impossible to make an impartial selection due to the tremendous crowds.

A group of New York style experts will pass up and down the boardwalk in rolling chairs and as an ensemble meets with their favor the wearer will be presented with a corsage of gardenias.

Southern Pines Plans Festival

Southern Pines, N. C., April 4.—With a full calendar of activities scheduled for April, the main event planned is the third annual spring blossom festival to be held April 16, 17 and 18.

The program will open with Old Slave Day in which many of the old darkies of ante bellum days will gather in the municipal park for their annual picnic, to be followed with a Negro sermon and mass singing in the afternoon.

Friday is musical day in which the girls from Flora McDonald College will give, as one of the main numbers the highland fling.

Saturday will be devoted entirely to sports. The morning program calls for a special Gymkhana featuring some of the best saddle horses and jumpers wintering here this season. In the afternoon Duke University and Davidson College will clash in a collegiate baseball game.

Paris Planning Biggest Fair In History of France in 1937

Exhibition to Reach From Trocodero to Eiffel Tower; Buildings to Emphasize Legacy of Country's Art and Manner.

The French capital known throughout the ages as the setting for huge exhibitions and fairs is preparing to dwarf all previous attempts by the preparations under way for the International Paris Exhibition of 1937.

From the Trocadero to Eiffel Tower, a new city of beautiful buildings within the heart of Paris is rising, artistically emphasizing the constructon legacy of French art and manner. Following the central theme of the Colonial Exposition of 1931, with its single purpose of emphasizing the life and industry of the French Colonial possessions, the basic concepts of the coming exhibition are to stimulate the production of artistic commercal goods as opposed to mass producton and standardized wares.

The fidelity of modern technique beauty with utility will be shown in the buildings themselves, which are the prize contributions from the nation's best architects.

The principle will be illustrated by two harmonious groupings converging from the Seine embankment in which various types of provincial architecture will be shown, not as a survival of the past, but to demonstrate that it is possible to keep regional tradition as a basis of modern construction. M. Jacques Greber, assistant chief architect of the exhibition, who has already achieved great fame in America, is seizing the opportunity to show the world what can be done on the basis of a master plan which provides for the unity of a whole city.

Among the unique features of the exhibition will be the unified color scheme which will be extended for daylight effects and night illuminations. The district between the Alma Bridge and the Pont des Invalides on the right bank of the Seine will be the section devoted to arts and sciences. The left bank will be connected by a serious of garden sections interlacing with beautiful bloom the imposing buildings as sloped to the Seine.

The Grand Palais of the Champs Elysees on the side of the Avenue Victor Emmanuel III will be devoted to science, while the left bank will be used as entrance facilities by rail and local transit systems.

One of the leading organizers of the exposition is M. Francois-Latour, assistant commissioner general, under whose auspices the participation of foreign nations in the exposition has been speedily going forward. Thus far the nations which are inscribed on the official list comprise Belgium, Luxembourg, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Japan, Switzerland, Hungary, Chechoslovakia, Poland, Greece, Rumania, Germany, Latvia, Bulgaria, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay, Egypt and Iran, with the French colonials and protectorates. Most of the foreign exhibits will be placed on the left bank of the Seine and will face one of the important entrances near the French villages section, which is to portray the life of provincial France

Great preparations are being made for presenting in an attractive and constructive manner the section to be known as the regional center, in which displays from the Alps, Mediterranean and the Pyrenees are to be the central theme. Modern art is to be housed in a modern two-wing museum, which is being erected as a permanent display.

Inca Gold.

Much of the Inca gold thrown into Lake Titicaca during the squeezing of Peru by Pizarro is still there. Quantities of it are "fished" up from time to time.

Sweden Expecting Many Americans At Gothenburg Fair

When the great Gustavus Adolphus more than 300 years ago commanded the construction of Gothenburg on Sweden's west coast, his main reason was that the country sorely needed a port facing the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean. "Here the city shall rise," was his order. And there it rose, modest at first, but growing and prospering through the years. A rich and dignified blend of British and Dutch influence, Gothenburg, with its patrician homes, its pleasant canals and stately government buildings, became one of the greatest cities in the north.

Today Gothenburg is Sweden's second largest city, its wide window to the west and a port where gather ships from every corner of the world. Its industries have developed, and its textiles, ball bearings and other machine products are known throughout the world. For 19 consecutive years an imposing trade mart, the Swedish Fair, has been held there, from May 16 to 24, exhibiting in handsome pavilions the cream of Sweden's industrial output.

Santa Fe Is Pushing Southwest Project

Railroad Preparing to Let Oklahoma Extension Job.

S. T. Bledsoe, president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co., has announced that the construction of the line from Boise City, Okla., to Las Animas, Colo., involving the construction of 111.26 miles of new main track at an estimated cost of $3,750,000, would begin as soon as contracts can be let and construction materials assembled.

This is a part of the line from Amarillo, Tex., to Las Animas, Colo., and is the last link of a through line between Colorado and Texas points. The portion from Amarillo, Tex., to Boise City, Okla., a distance of 121 miles, was completed May 15, 1931, and construction work discontinued because of the depression.

The completion of this line will save from 142 to 226 miles in the movement of freight over Santa Fe lines to and from Colorado, from and to points in Texas and on portions of the Santa Fe lines in Oklahoma and New Mexico, and will give the Santa Fe the shortest route between Denver and Amarillo and intermediate points.

A VACATION TO EUROPE THE SCOTCH WAY
WHEN you're making your plans for your European trip, you'll certainly want to include the British Isles. The sensible way to plan your tour is to start with Ireland. From there to Scotland—on down through England—and then to the Continent. That's the direct way, for you don't retrace your steps. It's the logical way, for you waste no time. It's the economical way, for you spend no extra money back-tracking on your itinerary. It's "the Scotch Way"—which means you go Anchor Line.
See Ireland First
You have your choice of two routes to Ireland. Anchor Line ships go by way of DUBLIN—or by the northern route, stopping at LONDONDERRY or BELFAST. But whether you land in the north or the south you'll love the beauty of Ireland's lake-dotted countryside and her green-brown hills—the romance of her feudal castles and tall round-towers. You'll want to see the Blarney Stone and hear the bells of Shandon. You'll want to meet and visit her laughter-loving people.
Across to Scotland
Across the Irish Sea to Scotland! You land at GLASGOW. And from there you have your choice of any number of tours. There is the coach trip through the Trossachs. The boat trips on the Lochs and through the Caledonian Canal. There are the towns and castles and abbeys of Sir Walter Scott—the fields and glens of Robert Burns. Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Balmoral—all filled with memories of past history and with present activity. And throughout the land, a genial welcome from everyone.
And when you at last regretfully leave the land of kilts and clans, you have ahead of you the trip through the lovely English countryside—and the thrill of the continent.
Minimum one-way fares—Cabin Class $142; Tourist $110; Third $82. Reduction for round trip bookings.

Strange Sights Meet Strollers Through the Smaller Streets of Old Japanese Towns

Quiet Places Untouched By Modern Improvement

Baby Rides on Mother's Back; Grandmother in Perambulator; Dogs Pull High-Piled Carts to Add to Traffic Problem.

By Dorothy Harrington.

It's a beautiful evening in Everytown, Japan—Everytown being just a general name for any of the really Japanese cities that dot the interior. The moon is full and the air is slightly chilly. Let's put on a light coat and go for a walk?

Buses, street cars, bicycles and high piled carts pulled by men and dogs, make up the steady stream of traffic on the busy thoroughfare. We'll leave the noise behind and turn down the first side street we come to. It happens to be no more than an alley, but let's explore and see where it leads? The little unpaved street turns and twists as high wooden fences wall it's sides. There's an opening in one and as we peek through we see a small graveyard made of foot-high stone slabs with strange charactors written on them, they are huddled together as though afraid of the moonbeams that slide through the tall pine trees and make shadows on the statues of three stone priests who sit placidly meditating.

As we wind our way through the crowd, we pass women with children tied to their backs, the babies heads sway gently back and forth. Baby carriages filled in the strangest manner; one holds an old woman who is seriously seeing all there is to be seen. This day and age grandmother misses nothing, be she Western or Japanese.

On our right is the "Gata" shop, where the straps of the wooden and felt shoes are fitted. There are other stores that sell kimonos and "obes," the long silk sash worn with the kimono. There's the cake shop, where pastel shaded cakes of various designs and sizes sit beside bean paste bricks and look invitingly at the passer-by. The ornament shop, where combs and trinkets of ivory, ebony, jade and metal make pretty decorations of flowers and birds for the intricately piled perfumed hair of the Japanese lady.

Before us we see a huge wooden gate, guarded on each side by "Deva" gods, who are the protectors of the temple that is just beyond. These firery red gods stand guard incased in a wooden grating, and prayers are chewed and spat in at them. We give a beggar a few sen, walk past stone lanterns to the wooden steps of the temple, where stands a large bronze insence burner giving forth thin blue smoke and perfuming the air with a sweet aroma. The temple is crowded, so we won't stop to look at the gold and brocade hangings, but will come again some other evening.

We turn down a little side street at the back of the temple, where on the paper doors of the houses are silhouetted the shadows of the people inside, they look like goblins and things from another world.

The air is clear and the sound of a "samesan" or Japanese banjo, is heard in the distance as we pass a little wayside shrine. It's after 10 o'clock and the stores, having put up their wooden doors that slide shut, are closed for the night. A man passes us hitting two sticks together. He is the night watchman and the sound is supposed to scare burglars away, and strange as it may seem the constant tapping of the sticks at regular intervals is a little unnerving even to the Western temperment.

As he goes down the street, the night claims another sound; it is the little bell of the blind masseur as he slowly goes his rounds. We pass another shrine and temple, the huge brass-studded doors closed tight. The moon way up in the starlit sky makes the stone tiled roofs of the houses shine like silver, all is quiet.

We arrive home tired and content after our long walk. The images of strange sights are still luminous in our sleepy eyes and strange sounds drift through our windows to remind us that these things are more real than the dreams which, presently, will visit our slumbers.

Fashion Parade At Asbury Park Is Easter Plan

Orchids to Be Given Best Dressed Women on Boardwalk.

Asbury Park, N. J., April 4.—Union sunrise services to be held on the beachfront here with more than 15 of the city's churches participating in the mass ceremonials, will usher in the observance of Easter Sunday in this resort.

Combined choruses of more than 1,000 voices stationed on the boardwalk will furnish a fitting musical background for the devotionals. Aside from a special program of vocal numbers arranged for the event, all churches in the city are preparing to receive parishioners and visitors at individual services following the sunrise ceremonies. The Rev. Ralph E. Stewart, of the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, will lead the combined services at sunrise.

A highlight of the Easter Sunday activities here will be the "Orchid Promenade" to be staged on the boardwalk during the afternoon, when the hundred most smartly dressed women will be picked from the throngs of promenaders.

Corsages of orchids will be presented to the winners by a committee of judges, including outstanding personalities in the radio, newspaper, art and fashion fields. Included in the judges' committee will be Arnold Genthe, dean of photographers, whose portraits of Greta Garbo first brought that famous star to the attention of movie producers in this country.

Cape May County Plans Campaign

Local Group to Promote New Jersey Beach.

The Department of Public Affairs, of Cape May County, N. J., which is under the direction of Percy H. Jackson, of Wildwood, chairman of the County Board of Chosen Freeholders, has already started the annual county promotional campaign.

An exhibit has just been completed in Florida which resulted in hundreds of inquiries being received. Moving pictures of Cape May County's boardwalks, beaches, inland waterways, swimming pools, golf courses, tennis courts, fishing and other vacation features enabled the many visitors to see for the first time the many attractions and advantages of southern New Jersey resorts. The fine white sand attracted considerable interest.

The county has prepared two illustrated booklets for circulation this season, one for answering farm and rural inquiries and the other will be used in answering seashore inquiries. All inquiries will be handled as in the former years by the Department of Public Affairs at Cape May Courthouse, New Jersey, the county seat.

Latins Asking Data Of North Countries

Fredericton, N. B.—Inquirers in the Latin-American countries are becoming conscious of New Brunswick, Canada.

D. W. Griffiths, director of the Government Bureau of Information and Tourist Travel here, is in receipt of a communication from Leonard de Lenou, of Sao Paulo, Brail. In his letter the Brazilian gentleman writes:

"I shall be much obliged if you will kindly send me information about travel in the principal centers of New Brunswick. Next June I am making a tourist trip in the United States and Canada, and wish to visit your province, too."

Almost in the same mail with the inquiry mentioned above came one from J. A. Strong, Canadian government trade commissioner in Buenos Aires.

The trade commissioner's letter was prompted by an inquiry from Carlos Sauberan, a resident of Buenos Aires.

Quebec Plans for American Visitors

Province Opens 18 Fishing Camps in Park.

Quebec City, Quebec, April 4.—Busy with plans to entertain a throng of American visitors attracted by the Old World Color and pomp of its Easter celebration next Sunday, this French Canadian province is engaged this week in preparations for the opening of its 18 fishing camps in the Laurentides National Park.

Planned by the Quebec government for the pleasure and convenience of motorists and fishermen, the camps are scattered at intervals along the 140 miles of roads that open the park to motorists.

Stretching like a great crescent over an odd million acres between the St. Lawrence River and Hudson Bay, the Laurentian Mountains, which are famed as one of this continent's greatest vacation lands, will entertain a record-breaking number of American pleasure seekers during the coming months, judging from early reservations.

Meanwhile, the department of highways is putting the Quebec system of improved roads in perfect condition for the forthcoming summer. Concentrating the attention of rod and reel enthusiasts the opening of the salmon and speckled trout season May 1 already is occasioning scores of inquiries and camp reservations as followers of Izaak Walton prepare to take advantage of the first opportunity to drop lines in the lakes and streams that abound with game fish.

2 Men Tied For District Chess Title

Sournin and Mugridge Will Play 3 Games to Settle It.

Retiring Champion Stark Finishes Second in Tournament.

By Willard H. Mutchler.

Donald H. Mugridge and Vladimir Sourin, both of whom have previously twice held the title of chess champion of the District, finished their hectic struggle for prémier honors in the current titular tourney with their goal still unattained. Mugridge, the only player to complete this schedule without losing a game, ended with a score of 7½ to 1½, having draws against Sournin, M. C. Stark, present champion, and S. Naidel. Sournin's point total entitled him to the tie, although he lost one encounter to Carl A. Hesse.

In the final round both the leaders emerged victorious. Sournin disposed of E. M. Knapp, and the score of the game appears below. Mugridge one more essayed P-K4 against R. N. Ramme, the latter, evidently coached by Sournin, replying with a Sicilian. Mugridge wisely refrained from again offering the Richter variation, electing to continue along the regular Scheveningen lines with 6 B-K2. Ramme, having only aborbed a partial lesson, quickly went astray, and gave away a piece on his sixteenth turn, which Mugridge accepted with glee.

In the remaining contests Stark defeated Hesse, and Max Kessler won from Konrad Willnich, V. L. Eaton and S. Naidel arrived at an adjourned position, unfinished as we go to press.

Retiring Champion Stark finished in second position, trailing the leaders by half a point. Hesse has fourth place clinched. The winner of the Eaton-Naidel game may occupy fifth, but a draw, which seems likely, would leave these two competitors in a four-way tie with Knapp and Kessler. Willnich and Ramme remain tied, in any event, for the cellar championship.

The Standings.

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
Mugridge	7½	1½	Kessler	4	5
Sournin	7½	1½	Eaton	3½	4½
Stark	7	2	Naidel	3½	4½
Hesse	5	4	Ramme	1	8
Knapp	4	5	Willnich	4	5

Sournin and Mugridge have been authorized by A. Y. Hesse, president of the District of Columbia Chess League, under whose auspices the tournament was conducted, to play a match of best out of three games to decide the title holder. The two will split the first and second prize moneys for the tournament play. The elder Hesse originally planned a one-game play-off, but the players preferred the longer test, and desire to play only one game per week, on Saturday nights. The play may be witnessed at the quarters of the Capital City Chess Club, Hotel Gordon.

Banks to Exhibit.

Newell W. Banks, the showman par excellence, will give a simultaneous exhibition tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock at the quarters of the Capital Chess Club, Hotel Gordon. Banks, in addition to being a chess master of no mean ability, was match checker champion of the United States for more than 25 years. He proposes, in the present exhibition, to play his collective checker opponents blindfolded, i. e., without sight of the boards. It is to be doubted, however, whether Chess Director Mugridge will consent to his undertaking more than half a dozen games sans voir, the while he is conducting the others.

Banks, since 1927, has established an enviable and remarkable record at simultaneous play in Washington, as shown in the appended table.

Checkers	57	0	17
Blindfold checkers	32	0	5
Total checkers	89	0	22
Chess	45	1	24
Blindfold chess	0	0	1
Total chess	45	1	25
Grand total	134	1	47

His lone loss was at the hands of J. W. S. Peters, and occurred two years ago at the Jewish Community Center. Banks' willingness to concede drawn battles is exemplified in the scores, but woe unto him who yearns for victory, for defeat is usually his. Local pride should require that Washington fandom endeavor earnestly to seriously mar Banks' record tomorrow night. We understand Banks' rates for play will be, as usual, 50 cents per board for checkers, and 75 cents for chess. The public is invited to attend and encounter the master in over-the-board play, or witness his interesting feats at blindfold play. Those desiring to participate can aid by bringing their own boards and men.

Solutions to Problems.

Problem 667 yields to R—Kt3, and proved a little too tricky for several of the solvers. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, Daniel Breeskin, Arthur Harbottle, George H. Mulligan, B. Felix Burkart, Henry M. Ward, Lulu S. Crawford, Druell Huskerson, Frank Evans, Joseph Chmielewski, Frank B. Stevens and R. B. Latimer.

Today we welcome the addition of the name of George H. Mulligan to the list of The Post's composers. And, as always upon initial publications, solvers are reminded to be alert for the possibility of "cooks," etc., in the solution.

National Emergency Council has sent out questionnaries to all Federal agencies, asking for information on radio time used by them. It is desired to know how many hours of radio programs are used, the cost and methods of contracting for the time, whether the programs are of a single nature or part of a series, who is responsible for them and whether future programs are planned.

Employes Organize.

The American Federation of Government Employes announced its latest lodge, No. 1071, the Wisconsin State Employes Association, with 1,111 members.

The organization formerly operated under a federal charter from the American Federation of Labor, as Federal Union No. 18,213. It is now affiliated to the American Federation of Government Employes, which was awarded jurisdiction over State, county and municipal employes by the A. F. of L.

The State, county and municipal group has also its own national organization, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, which works in conjunction with the A. F. G. E.

The annual District Office Managers Conference of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which opened here March 26, closed yesterday. The managers were introduced by Robert Sevey, chief, District Office Division.

New Credit Union.

A Central Credit Union for the District was launched last week at a meeting in room 358, Farm Credit Administration. Formation of the central unit has been sponsored by the District Credit Union League. All Government employes interested in the plan are urged by John Fox (P), leader in the movement, to call him at FCA.

True Color.

Whene'er I hear a man called "red,"
I wonder what folks mean,
Because, on close analysis,
They'd see that he is "green;"
They'd find him green with envy

Had won a little more from life
By doing things he'd shirk.

Get Guggenheim Awards.

Two Federal Government workers are among those awarded Guggenheim fellowships, which have just been announced for 1936. They are:

Catherine K. Bauer, consultant to various Federal housing and planning agencies. Project: To make a study of recent developments in housing and city and regional planing in Europe. Miss Bauer is the author of "Modern Housing" and many other similar studies.

Dr. George W. D. Hamlett, of the Bureau of Biological Survey. Project: A study of the embryology and reproductive cycles of certain South American mammals.

The stipends are normally $2,000 a year.

William S. Porte, assistant-pathologist, Plant Industry, in collaboration with two horticulturists of the Florida Agricultural Experiment Station, has written a circular describing a new variety of tomato, the Glovel.

Housing Operations Viewed.

Q.—Can you tell me something of the nature of the large-scale housing operations of the FHA?—T. M. Jackson (P).

A.—According to Stewart McDonald, Federal Housing Administrator, there has been increasing interest in the large-scale housing operations of the FHA. He points out that large-scale projects are privately owned, operated and financed, the FHA insuring mortgages on such developments as it insures dwelling mortgages and modernization credit loans. Thus far loans made on large-scale housing mortgages have been in the form of direct loans by insurance companies. Section 207 of the national housing act, says Mr. McDonald, requires the use of the same mechanism for paying the mortgage insurance as is used in the case of individual homes. It involves certain legal and financial problems when bond financing is considered, but these have Financing is clearly possible, and it is expected, states Mr. McDonald, that very shortly the first issue of bonds will be sold.

Soil Conservation Program.

Q.—What will be the nature of the studies to be made under the new research program undertaken by Agriculture with respect to soil conservation and erosion?—Theodore H. Vaux (P).

A.—This program, soon to be started by the Soil Conservation Service and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, is to be worked out in detail as rapidly as possible in co-operation with State agricultural colleges, soil conservation advisory committees, and agricultural experiment stations. It is expected, however, according to H. H. Bennett, director of the Soil Conservation Service, that the research will follow four general lines.

(1) A study of the economic and social conditions at the time erosion control measures are begun. This study also will determine to what degree soil erosion in the past has influenced the present situation.

(2) An estimate of the economic and social effects likely to result from the adoption of a definitely planned program of soil erosion control and conservation measures.

(3) Ultimately, an evaluation of economic and social effects that have resulted from the adoption of the recommended erosion control measures.

(4) Such additional studies as may be essential to the economic and social evaluation of the activities of the Soil Conservation Service.

The research program will be on a national basis and will be under the immediate subervision of Dr. Walter J. Roth, of the S. C. S., who is in charge of the economic and rural life studies.

Letters of Philo the Penguin

By H. I. Phillips

Dear Ed: Well, it looks to me like one of the good old-fashioned election years with everybody with a speaking voice denouncing somebody else and with all the silent voters rushing around taking a poke at the nearest nose. Already homes are being disrupted by advance debates over the Presidential campaign and in another month there should be street corner battles, cracker barrel fisticuffs and cries of "You're a liar" all along the line.

* * * *

I never feel safer about America than when it gets into one of these good old-fashioned noisy, sockdolager campaigns. We haven't had one in a long time now. The last election was no contest. You couldn't get anybody warmed up into a good argument. All the voters wanted was a quick change and by the time election day rolled around lots of 'em had forgotten the name of Roosevelt's opponent. In the Smith-Hoover campaign feeling ran pretty high, but it was largely one of those suppressed emotion campaigns in which most of the talking was done indoors and rather privately. We haven't had a knock-down-and-drag-out election since the Bryan era, but everything points to a wild party this summer and fall.

* * * *

Just take a look at some of the issues that will come before the voters:

1. Does the country favor regimentation instead of rugged individualism?

2. Should we go back to the gold standard?

3. Should the Constitution be zealously guarded or is it all right to overhaul it once a year and change the oil?

4. Is it a good thing to balance the budget or doesn't it make much difference as long as everybody seems happy?

5. Does a platform pledge mean anything and, if so, for how long?

6. Should government keep its finger in the industrial pie, or is it all right for a big corporation to be healthy?

7. Is it all right for a man to make a fortune by diligence, wisdom and perseverance, or should he be regarded as a snake in the grass?

8. Is the old-fashioned notion that every man is entitled to start at the bottom and work up to be scrapped or do we as a people still want to encourage initiative, thrift and the possession of an iron deer on the lawn if a fellow likes it?

9. Should everything be regulated up to and including golf foursomes, kite flying, deep breathing and the life and habits of the American oyster?

10. Should we sock the rich to the limit or is it a good idea to let a self-made man keep enough money so he won't have to wash and grease his own car?

11. Is there any limit to taxation or should the slogan be "The More the Merrier?"

12. Is economy in government always a good idea or doesn't it make any difference when the going is tough?

13. Should Washington knock the public utilities for a loop or will it be better for us to get our gas and electricity from people with experience?

14. Does the Government owe every man a living or should we return to the ancient theory that when a man finds himself in a hole there is no percentage in calling for a connection so he can telephone Congress?

* * * *

I could go on like this for a column and not have scratched the surface. There are so many issues to be decided that for once in his life the average man can talk you deaf, dumb and blind on at least three dozen. And this year we have the old personality element. There are millions who regard Franklin Delano Roosevelt as the greatest President in history and millions who will grow red in the face denouncing him as a half-baked theorist who doesn't know where he is going and doesn't care as long as he can describe it into a microphone.

* * * *

There are millions who think Roosevelt combines all the wisdom of Socrates, the Three Wise Men, Prof. Einstein, George Washington and the Oxford faculty, and there are millions who think he is just a man with a smile and a pleasant radio voice.

There are millions who consider he is fighting a righteous battle for the forgotten man, and millions who think that under his policies the forgotten man will wind up as a forgotten molecule. So much for the President. Then there is the Al Smith factor. The Unhappy Warrior, who by threatening to take a walk in this campaign abandoned the Brown Derby for the Bunion Derby, has declared war on Mr. Roosevelt and is denouncing him as a man who is scrapping all the principles of the Democratic Party and whose real name is Roosellini. You may or may not be an admirer of Alfred E. Smith but there is no denying the fact that he has long been one of the outstanding Democrats of the United States, a great friend of the common man and champion of the under dog. Nobody can look over his record without being impressed by the many laws put through by him for the betterment of man. So when he comes out in the open and declares war on anybody for being socialistic and radical it is at least something to start the folks arguing.

* * * *

Whether you agree with Al or not, there is no denying the fact that he is perhaps the most effective public speaker in the country. He has a way of talking right down to the level of the man on the street and making him know what he is saying. He has a gift for phrases that stick in the mind, and a good snappy phrase has helped swing many an election. At the moment Mr. Smith's part in the campaign is a very vital one and it makes it certain that there will be plenty of fireworks and whoopla from start to finish.

* * * *

Already you can get into a nice fight at the drop of a hat by bring-up the Smith-Roosevelt issue anywhere, including home, church or office, and I look for a new high for bloody noses by the first of June.

* * * *

The Republicans and Democrats are leaping at each others' throats with old-time gusto; in fact, I haven't observed so many violent remarks since the World War. There is dissension in the ranks of the G. O. P., too, in fact, it is almost as bad as in the ranks of the Democrats. The Democrats have only one man running for the nomination but the Republicans have a couple of dozen, all of which adds to the chaos and general disturbance.

* * * *

There are so many men trying to land the Republican nomination that it looks like the Major Bowes hour.

* * * *

Senator Borah is the most vociferous candidate, and the Republicans have been shuddering for months at the thought that he may be making headway. Borah has been scaring Republicans all his life and it is a question whether he wouldn't make Roosevelt seem like an old-fashioned conservative in a showdown test.

* * * *

Recently the feeling seemed to be growing that Gov. Landon has a good chance to be named by the G. O. P., the theory being that he is such a confirmed champion of thrift and balanced budgets that he may be a second Coolidge. Gov. Landon doesn't think you can ever have any money without saving it, and he believes in a pay-as-you-go policy. This used to be great surefire stuff with the American voters but it is a grave question whether it has any standing today. The general tendency during the last few years seems to have been to give the Bronx cheer to anybody who wanted to work hard and save money for rainy days. What the masses seem to favor just now is a government that will stop rainy days by official decree and the use of multiple mirrors.

* * * *

Personally I don't think even Calvin Coolidge could win a ward election in the present mood of the American people, and it is my hunch that this is a giddy era when there will be no general warming up to a man who believes in the simple life, rigid economy, a thrift account and all that sort of business. Anyhow, it is going to be the best circus in years. And my advice is to stand back from all those street corner groups or wear a nose guard until after November 3.

Yours truly,
PHILO THE PENGUIN.

New Radios Are Installed In Cadillacs

Closed La Salle Models Also Have Feature Included.

Set Uses Sound Board Across Forward Section.

Built into all closed models of the 1936 Cadillac and LaSalle cars is a new and exclusive radio development.

For the first time on any automobile, this installation now provides a built-in wooden sounding board which employs the same principle used in pianos and the better class of home radios to give full richness and value in the reproduction of tone.

The sounding board extends across the forward section of all Cadillac and LaSalle turret top roofs and is concealed by the fabric of the headlining. It is constructed of selected three-ply gum wood.

In conjunction with the sounding board, Cadillac-LaSalle engineers have perfected a new car speaker which fits into the sounding board between the headlining and the roof. Together, the two units raise the quality of automobile radio reception, the engineers assert, to the levels attained by the best home sets.

Although the actual dimensions of the sounding board are only 36 by 14 inches, the engineers point out that the method of installation actually gives it the effectiveness of a board 36 inches square, an area equalled in few home radios. They explain that the effective width of any sounding board is the distance to the nearest edge where air waves are free to travel around to the rear of the speaker. Accordingly, they have sealed the board, front and rear, against the roof, leaving only the ends free. Air vibrations, therefore, must travel to the extreme ends of the 3-foot board before reaching the rear of the speaker.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, APRIL 5, 1936

April Continues the Steady Procession of the Drama's Finest Exhibits

'Tobacco Road' Boasts Record That Bespeaks Its Solid Worth

Play Coming to National Tonight Has Been Seen by Almost Two Million People and Ranks Third for Length of Broadway Run.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"TOBACCO ROAD," the florid drama of certain aspects of backwoods life in America, which opens in the National Theater tonight for an eight-day engagement of 11 performances, is a play that has enjoyed a career of such unprecedented popularity, such wide discussion and heated controversy and such longevity as to place upon it the stamp of a superior work.

There are ample evidences of this in the many records it has established during the tag-end of the economic disturbance and subsequent depression that were precipitated by the cataclysmic crash of 1929.

The fact that three companies are now presenting the play in America and that it has been witnessed by more than 1,750,000 people; the fact that it already has enjoyed the third longest run in the history of the modern New York theater, having passed its 1,000th performance almost a fortnight ago and being exceeded in length of run only by Anne Nichols' "Able's Irish Rose" and the late Frank Bacon's "Lightnin'"; the fact that three stars have appeared in its leading role with no diminution in public interest in its story or acting; the fact that it has provoked more discussion than any other play in our generation and, as a result, has been more widely publicized—all these facts conspire to create the impression that here, indeed, must be a bit of dramaturgy so expertly articulated, so impressive in its truth and so compelling in its realism as to rank a little above its contemporaries in rounded perfection.

These priceless assets are a natural evolution and could not have been created and sustained by any of the devious devices of present-day "showmanship." The artificial stimulus of deliberate and purposeful exploitation and flamboyant ballyhoo is not equal to the task of keeping life in an inferior theatrical property over a span of years, or even months. It was tried in the case of "The Ladder," with disastrous results that cost the sponsor of that ill-starred drama a fortune and finally necessitated free admission to persuade anyone at all to attend.

All this being the case, it may not be amiss to examine the history of "Tobacco Road," with a view to affording Washington a sound basis for judgment as to whether or not it chooses to place itself among the literate and self-respecting communities that have perceived the merits of the play and recognized in it an honest exposition of conditions that actually exist, unpleasant as they may seem to some.

* * * *

EVERY play, then, quite obviously, is first an idea. The idea for "Tobacco Road" first took root in the mind of Erskine Caldwell.

Erskine Caldwell is a young native Georgian, the son of a Presbyterian minister and missionary among the "poor white trash" of the Georgia hinterlands. Young Caldwell grew up in the "tobacco road" country of his native State, until he left to attend the University of Virginia for three years. Then he started to write short stories. He wrote only about the people he had seen and known.

One day he started to write a short story about a family of Georgia cotton "share-croppers" that he once had visited. When he finally completed his "short story" he discovered, somewhat to his dismay, that it possessed the proportions of a complete novel. It was published as such, under the title of "Tobacco Road."

A year later, an equally young playwright, Jack Kirkland, read the novel and felt that it could be fashioned into an important American play. This decision reached, he betook himself, paradoxically perhaps, to Majorca, in Spain. After a year in the artists' colony there, Kirkland had his play finished.

Back he journeyed to Broadway with his script, and there interested Sam H. Grisman, a producer, in presenting the play jointly with him. Professional friends and advisers of Grisman thought the play had so limited a chance of success that they did everything in their power to dissuade him from sponsoring the production. But this Mr. Grisman had been stationed at Fort Hancock, Ga., during the war and knew the utter truth of the Caldwell-Kirkland story and the honesty with which the characters in the play were drawn.

Grisman, furthermore, had the courage to believe that one of the prime functions of the theater is to acquaint theatergoers with any unusual political or sociological condition existing in their country and educate them to an understanding of the sinister possibilities of that condition and what might be undertaken in the way of remedy.

So on the night of December 4, 1933, against the advice of their friends and counsellors, Sam H. Grisman and Jack Kirkland rang up the curtain on the first performance of "Tobacco Road" in New York City, with Henry Hull in the stellar role of Jeeter Lester. Then the storm broke.

* * * *

CRITICS differed in their opinions. Some praised, some damned with faint praise and others could not quite make up their minds. Then Percy Hammond, of the New York Herald-Tribune, dean of American critics, reported in his paper that in his 40 years of critical playgoing, he had seen Booth as Hamlet, Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Joseph Jefferson as Bob Acres, Marlowe as Juliet, Modjeska as Ophelia and George M. Cohan in "Ah, Wilderness," which he conceded were the traditional masterpieces of acting, but not one of them, he claimed, could equal the perfection of Mr. Hull's performance in "Tobacco Road."

From this time on "Tobacco Road" took its place as one of the significant American plays. Its popularity grew by leaps and bounds, as the as he appears in the picturesque role of Jeeter Lester, of which he was the creator in the original New York cast, in Jack Kirkland's vivid dramatization of Erskine Caldwell's novel of "Tobacco Road," to be seen for the first time in Washington at the National Theater beginning tonight. For this long-awaited engagement there will be matinees on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday and an extra evening performance next Sunday night, April 12, prior to the play's Boston run, opening a week from Tuesday.

An Exciting Theatrical Week On Broadway Interests Critic

A Participant in the Voting Describes Critics' Circle's Choice of "Winterset" as Year's Best Play; New York's New Offerings.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK, April 4.—There were theater excitements last week: Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontanne, and the Theater Guild cooperated in the production of a new Robert Sherwood comedy, "Idiot's Delight," and the night after its production the play was voted the second best drama of the 1935-36 season by the New York Drama Critics' Circle, assembled in more or less solemn convention.

Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset," the critics agreed, was, in their judgment, the best play of the year, the final ballot being 14 to 3 in its favor. The Critics' Circle includes 17 newspaper and magazine play reviewers. In an effort to arrive at a selection by as nearly unanimous a vote as possible, they allow themselves but four dissenting votes. This is their first annual award.

But let's to the Sherwood comedy first. The title is derived from the author's opinion of war. He was in the world conflict of 1914-18 and is still embittered by his experiences and resentful of men and influences that bring wars about. To provide a background for a free and interesting discussion of the question, he peoples an Italian hotel high in the Alps, close to the Austrian, French and Swiss borders, with an assortment of tourist and native characters.

The next World War is in process of development, as Mr. Sherwood visions the scene. The hotel tourists are held up temporarily by the Italian government.

"Idiot's Delight" is mostly a comedy, but there is a fine strain of philosophic conviction running through it as there was in "The Petrified Forest."

THE selecting of the best plays of a season is a harmless and diverting exercise that flourishes in the spring. As previously noted, the newly organized New York Drama Critics' Circle is the first in the field this year with the reviewers' choice of Mr. Anderson's serious poetic drama, "Winterset." This week, I believe, the Theater Club, Inc., is to vote, and next week the Drama Study Club. Each of these organizations numbers upwards of a thousand members. Then, late in April, the Pulitzer award will be made.

It was because of a general dissatisfaction with the Pulitzer selections that the critics were impelled to organize. They resented particularly the Pulitzer committee's recent decision to award the prize in the future only to those dramatists who never have won it before. This rule automatically barred Maxwell Anderson, Owen Davis, Sidney Kingsley and George Kaufman. Anderson won the Pulitzer prize with "Both Your Houses," Davis with "Icebound," Kingsley with "Men in White," and Kaufman as co-author of "Of Thee I Sing."

The writers' decision favoring "Winterset" was not arrived at without travail and brain cudgeling, but after the first ballot there never was much doubt as to the winner.

"Winterset" started off with ten votes, followed by three for Sidney Kingsley's "Dead End," two for the new "Idiot's Delight," one for the Katherine Dayton-George Kaufman "First Lady," and one for S. N. Behrman's "End of Summer," in which Ina Claire is being featured by the Theater Guild.

On the second ballot "Winterset" picked up a vote and stood at 11, "End of Summer," gained the 1 that had gone to "First Lady," "Dead End" remained at 3, and "Idiot's Delight" slipped to 1. The third ballot found "Idiot's Delight" voters rallying for a decisive test, going to 5 votes, but "Winterset" held on to its 11, and the Owen and Donald Davis dramatization of "Ethan Frome" took the odd vote. Then, on the fifth vote, "Winterset" was given 14 votes and "Idiot's Delight" was the runner-up with 3.

"WINTERSET," produced last September, is the play that Mr. Anderson wrote from his burning memories of the famous Sacco-Vanzetti case, and his strong personal conviction that there could have been, and probably was, a miscarriage of justice in that trial. His story is of the search for vengeance and justice pursued by the son of a man similarly sentenced to death for a crime he did not commit. The boy's investigations lead him across the trail of the criminals who had framed his father, and the judge who sentenced him. A quick-born love for the sister of a witness who might have saved the condemned man, if he would have had the courage to risk his own life by testifying at the trial, comes between the boy and his vengeance.

"Winterset" was not an overwhelmingly popular success in New York, but it did appeal definitely to the playgoing public interested in the more serious, and what generally is spoken of as the better drama. It ran for 179 performances and was then taken on tour. It has been playing in Philadelphia and Washington and is to go to Cleveland and Chicago, where it is scheduled for a mid-April opening. A return to New York, for a supplemental spring season, will probably follow.

THE Federal Theater is really doing a fine job with T. S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral" as the production of its Popu-Price Theater unit. It commands both the dignity and the stature of the theater at its best, with nothing slighted or excused in the name of good intentions and the reilef movement.

This is the poetic tragedy encompassing the death of Thomas a Becket at Canterbury Cathedral in the twelfth century.

It was first played at the scene of the murder itself, on the steps of Canterbury Cathedral, during last summer's dramatic festival held there. Since then it has been running successfully in London.

The play is written with the austerity of a Greek tragedy—a chorus intoning a part of the text—and the setting is a triumph of cathedral tracery against a deep sky. The role of the martyred archbishop is played by Harry Irvine, an actor of good presence and excellent voice, who reads the rhymed text with discretion and frequently with eloquent emphasis.

The action begins with the return of Becket to England, following a six-year exile in France, and a partial reconciliation with Henry II. The recital deals chiefly with the devoted churchman's preparation for acceptance of his martyrdom, including his last sermon to his followers, an impressive and deeply moving scene.

Follows the arrival of the king's knights, the doing of the murder, the frankly satirical and lightly humorous explanations of the murderers in excuse of their crime, and a concluding scene of protest to bring the mood back to the murder and its deeper human and historical significances.

These are not first rate actors, and there is an unhappy slurring of speech in much of the reading, but it is far and away the best performance by the WPA actors, and gives a foundation for the hope that something of permanent good may yet come from this emergency theater project.

Halsted Welles, of Yale, did the staging, under the supervision of Edward Goodman.

Prices of admission are 55 and 25 cents. The theater has been crowded at each performance.

Hampden Is On Farewell Tour In Noted Play

Comes to National Easter Monday in Celebrated Rostand Romance.

With Walter Hampden coming in his farewell performance of "Cyrano de Bergerac," playgoers of this city will have a final opportunity to see one of the most highly praised performances in the contemporary theater. Four years have passed since the actor-manager last presented this superb play—just long enough to whet the appetites of his admirers for another sight of him in his most picturesque part.

Cyrano is without question Mr. Hampden's most popular role, and many consider it his greatest, without forgetting his many masterly Shakespearean portrayls.

The Hampden engagement will be limited to a single week at the National Theater, beginning Easter Monday, April 13, at 8 o'clock sharp.

Certainly, there is no more fascinating figure in drama or history than Edmond Rostand's great-nosed Gascon adventurer, duellist, philosopher, soldier, lover, madman—with the pride of Lucifer, the courage of a Crusader and the tenderness of a woman. A gallant hero he, with his hands without gloves, shoes without buckles, pockets without money, but with a sword ever ready to leap from its scabbard in defense of that honor which he kept as unsullied as the white plumes floating gaily and defiantly above his head.

Mr. Hampden is faring forth in what will be his last appearance in "Cyrano" in a production of undiminished splendor. His settings are duplicates of the massive and beautiful ones designed for him by Claude Bragdon when he presented this masterpiece all season at the National Theater, New York, and his company again includes 75 players.

This is a daring thing to do in these uncertain times, but the impersonator of Cyrano should be as daring as Cyrano himself, and Mr. Hampden would not do so great an injustice to the play, or to himself, as to present it in a way not consonant with its standing as one of the great plays of all time.

WARNER BAXTER,

in the role of "The Robin Hood of El Dorado," the current screen feature of the bill at Loew's Fox Theater. In this stirring melodrama of California and the gold rush days, Baxter impersonates Joaquin Murrieta, one of the legendary bandit-patriots of the pioneer period.

'Great Ziegfeld' Is So Huge It Takes 3 Hours

Running Time Is Greatest of Any Roadshow Film of Recent Release.

One of the major screen events of the year will be the premiere of "The Great Ziegfeld," at the National Theater on Sunday evening, April 19, after which the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film will be seen there for a limited engagement, with performances twice daily.

Not in several seasons has M.-G.-M. booked a picture into a legitimate theater as a road show, limiting the presentations to two daily. But when "The Great Ziegfeld" was seen at an advance showing, it quickly became evident that it possessed all the entertaining qualities and colorful material necessary to a full-length musical show, and a special exhibition policy for the film was arranged. It will be presented as a road show in all of the major cities of the country.

Not since the days of the great Ziegfeld himself has such a lavish and extravagant entertainment been fashioned. The finished film runs a little over three hours, a rarity in itself, and many sequences and many famous names had to be omitted to insure a perfectly balanced, well-rounded photoplay.

Stars of the screen vie with the established, distinguished stage stars of the Ziegfeld "Follies" for honors. William Powell appears in the role of "The Great Glorifier," with Myrna Loy and Luise Rainer as leading women. Among the Ziegfeld "names" to be seen are Virginia Bruce, Fannie Brice, Harriet Hoctor, Buddy Doyle and Joseph Cawthorn.

Other featured players are Frank Morgan, Ray Bolger, Nat Pendleton, Reginald Owen, A. A. Trimble, W. W. Dearborn, Raymond Walburn, Jean Chatburn, Herman Bing and William Demarest.

The screen play was written by William Anthony McGuire and directed by Robert Z. Leonard. Many of the most enduring melodies from the "Follies" and other Ziegfeld shows are heard. Costumes are by Adrian.

All seats will be reserved for the two showings daily that will follow the special opening on Sunday night, April 19.

CAROLE LOMBARD,

one of the screen's most facile comediennes, who has one of the hits of her career in "Love Before Breakfast," the sprightly comedy now occupying the silver sheet at RKO-Keith's. Preston Foster, in this subject, reveals himself as an able light comedian.

PATRICIA ELLIS,

one of the cinema's most attractive young actresses, who is one of the three blondes seen in support of George Brent in "Snowed Under," the film feature of the bill at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater this week. Others are Glenda Farrell and Genevieve Tobin.

Newsy Reports and Gossipy Bits of Theater's Plays, Pictures and Personalities

Glen Echo Will Open April 18 For the Season

Amusement Park Is Ready for Crowds; Crystal Pool Open May 27.

Washington is promised a new recreation thrill when Glen Echo Park opens for the summer season on Saturday, April 18. The new attraction is a specially constructed scenic waterway on which will be operated a fleet of 20 "U-run-'em yourself" motor speed boats, to be driven by the patrons. The boats are of the Dodgem motorboat type, equipped with a three and one-half horsepower motor and are so simple in operation that any person can operate them with perfect safety around the beautiful scenic waterway.

Glen Echo's 26-year-old policy of free admission at all times will again be in force this year and all attractions, with the exception of the swimming pool, will be in operation when the gates open on April 18.

The Crystal pool will not be open until Wednesday, May 27.

Glen Echo is easily accessible to the Capital, either by a 40 minute ride along the Potomac in street cars or a 20-minute automobile trip on Conduct road, while the new Massachusetts avenue extended highway offers a 15 minute route direct to the entrance of the park. Ample parking space is always available.

All the attractions have been overhauled and inspected during the winter months and all are ready to give safe amusement throughout the season. Among the features are the "ride among the tree tops", otherwise known as a roller coaster, the Aeroplane Swing, the sensational Pretzel Ride, a real twister, the popular Dodgem miniature auto ride, a new 1936 model of the popular Whip, redecorated Carrousel, and refurnished shooting gallery, Skeeball alley and food and beverage units. New scenic effects have been added to the Old Mill.

Dave McWilliams and his popular twelve-piece orchestra again will furnish dance melodies in the Spanish Garden Ballroom every week night from 9 to 12 o'clock. McWilliams is planning an entertainment program in connection with these dances that promise to make them even more popular than in previous years.

Sunday schools, fraternal organizations and others planning picnics are invited to make use of the free picnic tables and other facilities of the park by filing their reservations as early as possible. Although the picnic season is still several weeks away, a number of reservations already have been booked.

Joseph Hart, superintendent, and the chief electrician of the park have co-operated in designing new lighting effects.

"Sign of Cross" Holy Week Film At the Little

"Sign of the Cross," Cecil B. DeMille's spectacular drama of religious persecution in ancient Rome, will be revived today through Saturday at the Little Theater, as a special Holy Week attraction.

Based upon the play by William Barrett, the film is replete with colorful incidents including the death of thousands of Christians in the arena and the burning of Rome while Nero plays upon his lyre.

The huge cast is headed by Charles Laughton, as Nero; Claudette Colbert, as the empress; Fredric March, as the handsome perfect, and Elissa Landi as the simple Christian maid.

Produced in 1932, "Sign of the Cross' is the oldest picture the Little has been able to secure, thus far, for revival. Altho many requests have been received for pictures released prior to 1933, it is very difficult to secure prints for public showing.

Irene Signs.

Through negotiations just completed, Irene Dunne will join the rapidly increasing roster of Paramount stars for this studio.

OLIVER HARDY AND STAN LAUREL

in the costellar roles of "The Bohemian Girl," the full-length feature picture adapted from the story of the Balfe opera of the same name, principal screen attraction for the week at Loew's Palace Theater, where it is being shown with "It Happened in Washington."

MARLENE DIETRICH,

who returns to a downtown screen this week in "Desire," chief feature of the film bill at the Metropolitan Theater. In this gay continental comedy-romance Miss Dietrich is costarred with Gary Cooper for the first time since her first American picture, "Morocco."

Straight From the Studios

Early-Morning Idiosyncracies of Motion Picture Stars Are Revealed by Studio Waitress; Chit-Chat and Whatnot of Filmdom.

HOLLYWOOD, April 4.—At night the film stars may have their caviar hors d'oeuvres, their sable auto blankets in the family limousine, and floor-side tables at the Trocadero, but early in the morning, ah, there's quite another thing. Before that first cup of coffee they're just ordinary human beings, and no more human than the rest of us whose feet are clay.

For eight years Margaret Sanders has been a waitress in a lunch room which faces across the street the entrance to Paramount Studio. Because it is handy and the food not too bad the rather small establishment does a brisk business, catering alike to stars who are in a hurry, directors who have much on their mind, property men and grips whose appetites are governed by the condition of their purse.

Jack Oakie is one of Margaret's steady customers. "He's just what you'd hope him to be," he says. "Always a lot of fun and always cheerful."

Occasionally the phone will ring and Marlene Dietrich's maid will order something sent over to her studio dressing room. "My, that's a lovely place," Margaret reports. "It's always filled with flowers, white ones. And the furniture is grand. Miss Dietrich is always at her dressing table in another room, and I only see her through the door. But from the quiet way the maid acts, and the way she tiptoes around, I guess Miss Dietrich is not much for talking in the morning."

But W. C. Fields is different, Margaret recalls. "The first time he came in for a couple of bottles of charged water I thought he was awfully mad, he shouted so. I remember he waved his arms like a man making a big speech and roared, 'Make haste, my good maid, my nerves are jangling and my art is calling.' So then I knew he was just fooling, like he does on the screen. I like him to drop in."

Gary Cooper "hardly says a word, but gee, he's handsome."

Carole Lombard is always laughing and "orders the funniest things sometimes. Once she wanted cream soda pop and some doughnuts," Margaret reveals.

"Bing Crosby? Oh, he always sits at the lunch counter, orders a glass of milk and coffee roll, and quietly reads the sports sections of the morning papers."

Elephants Forget.

Ever hear of an elephant that forgets?

W. C. Fields claims there's one working with him in "Poppy." It's a four-ton lady elephant named Jewel, who also worked with him in "Sally of the Sawdust" eight years ago.

The comedian declares she not only doesn't remember him, but is constantly subject to forgetfulness.

The trainer, Walter McLean, admitted his ponderous pachyderm does forget occasionally, and in defense added the old adage about an elephant never forgetting is grossly exaggerated anyhow.

"Bah!" retorted Fields. "Why 20 years ago there was a bull elephant I worked with in vaudeville who recalled me instantly when I saw him again 10 years later in a Cleveland circus. A noble beast named Brother—Buster—Bevo—. Well, something like that. He was like me—not much good on names—but never forgot a face."

Cut It Out, Joan.

Joan Blondell points out that the California ban on indigent transients is bound to lead to amusing errors, now that George Arliss is playing tramp roles.

Best Laid Plans.

In a little experience with carrier pigeons, which Director Eddie Cline tells about, it is possible to assail the machine age and its threat to drive civilization to pot. Eddie, it seems, had read a lot about how pigeons carried photographs from Flemington, N. J., and again flew in with pictures of celebrities quarantined in New York Harbor. Now that little touch would be something to work on for Eddie's forthcoming picture, "Murder with Pictures," in which a newspaper photographer is involved.

He did work on it, wiring Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press for permission to inject carrier pigeon drama into the wire photo service. Cooper approved, Cline smiled. Then he walked on the set of "The Princess Comes Across" at Paramount. And there was his pet stunt, getting whopped up for all the drama it's worth—carriers winging to press with a parcel of photos of celebrities taken on an ocean liner long before it docked.

Such Is Fame.

A recent experience at a preview made Joan Bennett a bit less enthusiastic about Hollywood, and nobody is blaming her.

A souvenir-hunting fan snatched Joan's hat right off her head as she left the theater. Before she could turn around another worshiping citizen yanked a handkerchief out of her hand.

Instead of flaring up, Joan drew on her sense of humor and calmly went her way.

Sun Never Sets.

Hollywood's English colony has finally discovered the one thing it lacked to make it a perfect bit of "Old England," a salon.

Presided over by Alison Skipworth, affectionately known to her intimates as "Skippy," the Britishers gather every Sunday at the actress' home, where she serves tea and crumpets during the afternoon.

Notes on The Cuff.

First it was Merle Oberon, and now Paramount may draft Margaret Sullavan for the heroine role of "I Loved a Soldier" if Marlene Dietrich doesn't return to the part . . . Joan Blondell taking her young son to the mountains for his first glimpse of snow . . . Now that the rains have ceased, Sir Guy Standing is living in his auto trailer again . . . In order to attend the annual film academy dinner, Bette Davis cancelled her Honolulu vacation . . . John Barrymore creates excitment whenever he is seen with his "Ariel," Elaine Barrie, and her mother . . . Claudette Colbert has joined the sun-worshipers, who get out in their scanty suits, and so has Marlene Dietrich . . . Hollywood learns that Jan Kiepura received a long and warm reception upon his arrival in Vienna.

Understudy Has A Scant Chance To Win Acclaim

The Opportunity to Enjoy Overnight Fame Has Gone by Board.

By Willard Keefe.

New York, April 4.—Perhaps you haven't noticed it, but stage stars seem to have united against the legend about the understudy rising superbly to the big chance. The system by which the exalted keep their understudy in his accustomed obscurity and grouchiness is simplicity itself: they simply don't give him any chance.

Leslie Howard is probably the pioneer figure in the movement of dampening the hopes of the underling. A year ago, when some ailment laid him low during the run of "The Petrified Forest," his show was suspended until he was whole again. The management denied itself the satisfaction of passing the torch to some eager nobody, and sensibly decided that without Howard it hadn't a salable commodity.

This year has seen that anti-understudy movement greatly expanded. We have at least two instances of the withdrawal of a dominant player hurrying the end of the enterprise. Although the managements of both may deny it with considerable heat, neither "Jubilee" nor "Scandals" had the same market value once their respective strengths, Mary Boland and Rudy Vallee, withdrew.

At the opening of "Jubilee," proclaimed a hit, some of the commentators recognized the immense debt it owed Miss Boland. They reported that her tireless head-on clowning, in the role of the amourous queen, gave the whole proceeding a vitality no amount of slick writing could infuse into them. She was succeeded by the more restrained Laura Hope Crews and, gallantly as Miss Crews served in a role unsuited to her, it wasn't long before everything was called off.

In the trade talk born of the fist fight between George White and Vallee, defenders of the crooner insisted his late entrance into "Scandals" try-outs gave it a sadly needed box-office lift. However generous these words may be, it remains nonetheless true, and doubtless with satisfaction to Vallee, that the show closed in the first fortnight of his banishment.

Helen Hayes easily claims an importance above her show. In the service of radio, she needed her Tuesday evenings, so her producer, Gilbert Miller, who knows when he has a good thing, darkened "Virtoria Regina" on that night each week. The feeling is that had an understudy, over-addicted to the movies, suggested she spell Miss Hayes on such a night, Miller would have clapped her into protective custody.

Katharine Cornell is, of course, the whole vibrant force of her plays. Excellent as the company is in support of her in "St. Joan," it is inconceivable that they would proceed without her. When she was stricken with a throat complaint in Pittsburgh, in the tryout tour, all plans for the opening were dismissed until she was herself again.

Eleanor Powell found excuse to efface herself from "At Home Abroad" at a time, late in its run, when a great many ticket buyers were tempted to it exclusively by a wish to see her dance. Beatrice Lillie and Ethel Waters held the revue together and a skilled replacement was found for Miss Powell, but the truth remains that "At Home Abroad" was soon on its way to other encampments.

Lynn Fontanne has, on occasions, yielded her role to an understudy during a play's run, but she was so necessary a part of the recent "The Taming of the Shrew" that she suffered agonies to carry on with a wounded knee. As Katherine, she submitted to a great deal of roughhouse comedy at the hands of Alfred Lunt's Petruchio, necessitating an armor almost as heavy as that Mickey Cochrane wears behind the bat.

The power of forcing a show's suspension by illness is accordingly the true measure of stardom. On the occasion of Howard's withdrawal from "The Petrified Forest," a budding star decided to exercise a similar prerogative.

A newcomer playing her first big part in a successful farce, she reported herself helpless with some strange ache.

The manager, sympathetic but far from dismayed, suggested she get a good rest and leave the play's anxieties to the understudy. The lady was on the job at curtain time, in a fairly high temper, too, at this snub to her self-esteem.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON, VIRGINIA WEIDLER,

two of the important members of the cast of "Timothy's Quest," the film version of the Kate Douglas Wiggins story, now on view as chief feature of the bill at Loew's Columbia Theater. The role of Timothy is played by Master Dickie Moore.

"Tobacco Road" Boasts Record

saying goes, and most of the so-called cognoscenti attributed the capacity audiences to the brilliance of Mr. Hull's portrayal of an uncouth but very real character.

Thus it came about that when an earlier motion-picture commitment compelled Mr. Hull to quit the cast and journey to Hollywood for another kind of acting, the learned gentlemen of Broadway were sure "Tobacco Road's" great favor would falter, if it did not completely collapse. But no such thing happened.

Into Hull's role and glorious tradition stepped one James Barton, formerly a star of the Ziegfeld "Follies" and other revues and a familiar figure upon the vaudeville stages, where he was known strictly as a clever song-and-dance man. Jeeter Lester was the first character role he ever had essayed. The experiment was a daring one, but the results justified the risk. Barton carried on to continuous capacity business for seven months more and then himself heeded the golden voice of Hollywood.

Then up stepped Jeeter, the third, in the person of James Bell, and Mr. Bell performed so satisfactorily that "Tobacco Road" ran on and on to that same old standing-room patronage for another year. Early last fall Barton returned to Broadway and Jeeter.

Mr. Hull, his stint in the studios completed, also returned East and resumed the role he had originally created in the company which will be seen in the National Theater tonight. He has played the role of Jeeter Lester more than 700 times during the more than a year of touring that has taken him to all of the principal cities between the East and West coasts. Add over 400 performances by a third company that is on tour and you have the basis of the reason Mr. Grisman and Mr. Kirkland are beginning to suspect that their friends, who advised so sincerely against the folly of producing "Tobacco Road," may only have been kidding, after all!

• • • •

WHATEVER the attitude of mind or the purpose of these solicitous kibitzers may have been—and over and above any strictly financial concern that may have prompted their caution—the record that "Tobacco Road" has compiled is prima facie evidence of a quality of worth that a million and three-quarters paying patrons are willing to indorse, unless a "conspiracy of silence" has of a sudden taken possession of the multitudes. Conspiracies of silence are not frequent in the United States—especially in Presidential years!

If "Tobacco Road" is a play of such abject depravity that it may not with impunity be witnessed by discriminating audiences of intelligent adults, then there are many areas within the boundaries of this country into which the intelligentsia may not dare set foot.

Translated into terms of geography instead of theater, the idea sounds utterly preposterous.

That is precisely what it is.

Hollywood Newcomer Wins Lead With Bing

Roles in two pictures, one a story of childhood and the other an air melodrama, have skyrocketed Frances Farmer, former University of Washington co-ed, into one of the most coveted roles in Hollywood—the feminine lead with Bing Crosby in his new film, "Rhythm on the Range."

Miss Farmer next will be seen in "Border Flight."

The Gayety.

Coming to the Gayety this afternoon will be the Washington born and bred comic, Billy ("Cheese and Crackers") Hagen and his all-star burlesk revue. Leading the feminine contingent are the charming Mildred Adair and pretty Louise Phelps.

"KITCHEN PIRATES,"

the familiar act that returns to the stage of the Earle Theater this week to headline the vaudeville program, includes these two expert performers.

BEN BERNIE,

the "old maestro" himself, who returns to Washington this week with "all the lads" to present the stage portion of the entertainment at Loew's Fox.

Studio to Postpone Sullavan's Picture

Paramount Studio officials have decided to postpone production of "Hotel Imperial" until Margaret Sullavan entirely recovers from the broken right arm received last week in an accident on the set. It will probably be six weeks before the cast can be removed from her arm.

In the meantime Charles Boyer will return to Walter Wanger studio and new arrangements for borrowing the actor will be made when Miss Sullavan returns.

Has New Job.

Bing Crosby has a new job. He's having to learn to roll cigarettes for his role as a crooning cowboy in "Rhythm on the Range."

Carrie Jacobs Bond will be honored by Phil Spitalny and his all-girl orchestra, WJSV, at 6. Other selections include "When the Logs Come Rolling Down," "La Paloma," "But Where Are You?" and "Pagan Love Song."

Red Nichols and Tommy Dorsey, two exponents of modern rhythm, and Gogo de Lys, popular songstress, will be guest stars with Lud Gluskin for his "World Dance" half-hour, WJSV, at 8. Nichols will play a typical "hot" trumpet interpretation of "Wind" and Dorsey adds "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You" as a trombone solo.

Ray Perkins and his original National Amateur Night, recently heard from WJSV and now a Mutual net show, can be heard beginning tonight at 6 from WOR in Newark. This is WOR's first presentation of the show, although other Mutual stations have been broadcasting it for several weeks.

Clyde McCoy, whose "Sugar Blues" and trumpet playing have won him notice, appears as guest star with Eddie Cantor, WJSV, at 7.

Lily Pons is Clem Clemens' guest in "The Melody Master," WRC, at 11. Miss Pons will not sing, but will tell of her recent European visit.

Cleveland winners of Paul Whiteman's talent search will be heard in the "Musical Varieties," WMAL, at 9:45. The selected artists are the Collegians, a singing trio.

Rossini's oratorio, "Stabat Mater," will be performed in the Music Hall of the Air, WMAL, at 12:30.

David Ross will fill the half hour vacated by Leslie Howard, WJSV, at 2, beginning today. His readings will be presented with a musical background provided by Emery Deutsch and his orchestra.

Arturo Toscanini will conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony, WJSV, at 3, in the Overture to Weber's "Oberon," Beethoven's Seventh Symphony in A major, Martucci's "Notturno" and "Novelletta," Paul Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" and the tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," by Richard Strauss.

Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, will be interviewed by H. V. Kaltenborn, political analyst from Topeka, WJSV, at 1:45. Kaltenborn will question the Governor regarding his attitude toward a wide variety of public issues.

A special dramatization of the last days of Our Lord, the last week leading up to His Crucifixion and Resurrection, will be presented by the Ave Maria Radio League Players, WOL, at 6:30.

Rubinoff Honored.

Rubinoff has been invited to conduct the Seattle Symphony Orchestra in a special concert in connection with the sixty-second annual Shrine convention, to be held in Seattle in July. He has been asked to appear as both violin soloist and conductor and is the first radio star to be accorded this honor. He recently appeared as guest conductor of the Cincinnati and Detroit Symphony Orchestras.

Technique of Radio Speech

By Carleton Smith.

(Note: This is the concluding portion of an address made recently by Mr. Smith, manager of WMAL and N. B. C. Presidential announcer. It will be of particular interest to those interested in the technique of writing for radio and—making that first radio talk.)

If you are told you will have 15 or 30 minutes on the air it means you will have just that. But, there are other things which bear on the length of your speech. You must allow 30 seconds of each broadcast period for the station announcements required by the Federal Communications Commission. Then you must allow approximately 30 seconds for the announcer's introduction of you and he must have a like period in which to close the program. Thus of a 15-minute period you will actually have about 13½ minutes for yourself. Practice will show you how many pages of copy or how many words to prepare to fill the period assigned to you.

A good practice is to have several short paragraphs near the end of your speech which may be deleted if your time runs short, but which may be used if you find you've speeded up your rate of delivery.

If you are speaking in public, that is before a visible audience, and your address is broadcast, you should make allowance for possible applause.

Your remarks should always be typewritten, in as large type as is available. The lines on the typewritten page should be double or triple-spaced. It's much easier to read from the double-spaced page than from closely worded, badly spaced copy.

Insofar as it is possible for you to do so you should avoid the use of figures. The repeated use of numerals is usually wasted on the radio audience. Perhaps you can get over your statistical ideas by making comparisons with figures which are familiar to those listening in.

I believe it is generally considered to be wise, when speaking without a visible audience, that is, in the studio, to speak in conversational style. Speak naturally . . . don't shout . . . don't whisper . . . and your listeners will understand your message more clearly and readily. The speaker should be seated comfortably with his breathing free . . . then smile and proceed.

And I should like to say that the radio operator who monitors the program and the announcer or other persons supervising the broadcast can be of much help to the radio speech maker. Different types of microphones and other radio equipment have different characteristics and those experienced in radio can help you in adjusting the microphone to your voice for the best results.

In making an address from the studio many speakers find it helpful to visualize some particular party which may be listening in and in their minds address themselves directly to that party.

If your remarks seem to be a little long for the time allotted and you think it necessary to speak rapidly—do so at the beginning of your speech and retard your pace as you go along. This will give you a better and more understandable delivery on the more important points with which you wish to impress your audience.

It is generally considered wise to keep your words and language simple. The radio is not a good place to try out the big and seldom-used words in your vocabulary unless you're quite sure of yourself. Reading the speech aloud before you go on the air will show you whether certain words and phrases should be changed or deleted for clarity. I shall never forget the time . . . while on the air . . . I ran into this phrase—"in an inimitable manner." I'm not sure now whether I got through that one or not. Such sentences as "The seething sea ceaseth, thus the seething sea sufficeth us," are good exercises in the development of precise diction, but they are examples of what should be avoided in preparing radio addresses.

Radio is no doubt responsible for the short, meaty introductions and speeches in vogue today. Not so long ago, 15 and even 30 minute introductions were not uncommon and orators on the hustings rambled on and on at great length. The time limitations of radio have shown these same speakers that by choosing their ideas and words carefully they can transmit their thoughts much more simply and plainly and usually with better results in less time.

Barrymore Poses With Cora Sue

Behind those whiskers is Lionel Barrymore, recently signed as music commentator in Sigmund Romberg's Monday night half-hour. His "partner" is little Cora Sue Collins, who feeds questions to him. The whiskers are needed in Barrymore's forthcoming picture.

Bernie Rehearses, Yowsah!

Have you ever watched a Ben Bernie rehearsal for his Tuesday night program? Well, picture, if you can, a pendulum swinging. Realize that with each swing something must happen at a radio rehearsal because it is here, more than anywhere else, that time is money. Each minute is alloted to something definite and rehearsing and timing are all important because lost moments cost dollars.

Now that you realize the importance of adhering to definite schedules—forget about it all and get an eyefull of a Ben Bernie rehearsal. "Forget about it all," because that's exactly what the Ole Maestro does about it. His rehearsals are a bit delirious, if not altogether insane. Or so they seem to the on-looker.

However, Bernie knows what he is doing. The reason Ben doesn't get down to a systematic, routined rehearsal, is because he seldom knows what he's going to do until just a few minutes before he gets the signal from the control room that the coast-to-coast wires are cleared, and they're about set to go.

The old maestro, of cigar-and-fiddle fame (he even smokes them in the broadcasting studios where the sight of even a butt brings out the police!) puts on a show all his own for anyone who happens to be at rehearsal in the hope of learning something about how he builds a broadcast.

The inquisitive would see Mickey Garlock, Ben's fiddler and assistant-director, put the band through their paces on the musical numbers picked for that night. Ben is either in the control room, or off to one side, doping out the day's bets at the race track. The ubiquitous cigar is always there. Right in the middle of placing a bet he's apt to hear a few bars he doesn't like and shouts "play that over again, boys . . . it sounded off . . ." But for nary a moment does he lift his eyes off the racing form until the nag is picked (and we have it from the maestro himself that it's usually the last nag that he picks!) after which he runs over what everyone hopes will be the guest star script that evening.

They run through it once. Ben hits a line he doesn't like and fires a suggestion through the mike. Then the commercial script is given a reading. Halfway through that reading he stops and beckons a page boy or one of the lads to drop everything and get him a cup of coffee, "half hot water, pleases . . . guess I can't take it any more!" and goes right on reading as if there had been no interruption.

How can a thing like this be timed! . . . Interruptions for coffee, for suggested changes in commercials, a moment to wipe his glasses, another to start a fresh cigar, another to phone the bookie to see if one of his horses came in. But one thing is certain. Ben is confident that things will come out right, when he finally goes on the air.

They say that guest stars enjoy nothing as much as a call to appear with Bernie. He has the knack of making people feel at home, whether they are listeners to his kindly kidding, or entertainers on his programs. The old maestro happens to be a good showman.

One of the old guard of radio is Benjamin Bernie, and he's been placing his tongue against a firm cheek for a long time, shooting wisecracks into the empyrean. It's probably all because of the way the infectious informal Bernie broadcasts are conceived and executed.

SMITH BALLEW

replaces Al Jolson as singing master of ceremonies of the "Chateau," effective last night. He's a band leader, too.

Barrymore a Composer.

Lionel Barrymore comes to his post as music commentator on the Sigmund Romberg program with a wide knowledge of music and a reputation as a composer. Barrymore is a talented pianist and has written several concertos. He plays in his dressing room, between scenes on the motion picture set, as relaxation.

"Winterset"

Drama Critics and Play Cast in Special Program.

Dramatic scenes from Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset," awarded their first annual prize by the New York Drama Critics Circle, with comment on the current theater by George Jean Nathan, Brooks Atkinson and Percy Hammond, will feature a special program from WMAL tonight at 10:30.

Burgess Meredith and Margo, stars of the cast, will be heard in the "Winterset" scenes. Anderson's play was chosen as the best Broadway offering of the current season by the seventeen New York drama critics forming the Circle. Anderson is one of the leading dramatists in the American theater, with such plays to his credit as "What Price Glory," "Both Your Houses," (Pulitzer Prize winner in 1933) and "Mary of Scotland."

During the broadcast George Jean Nathan, drama critic of Vogue and Life, will survey the current drama season on Broadway and detail reasons for the formation of the New York Drama Critics Circle. Maxwell Anderson will read the prologue to "Winterset."

Talley-Ho!

For the first time in her career, Marion Talley appears in a regular weekly air program, Friday nights, WRC.

Jack Hylton And Revue in WMAL Series

Jack Hylton and his Continental Revue will be heard from a Washington station for the first time when the British orchestra leader and his versatile group of entertainers are brought to WMAL tonight at 9 o'clock in a new weekly program. This will be the first time Hylton has been heard in the East.

Hylton, with his blind pianist-composer, Alec Templeton; Pat O'Malley, Irish tenor and dialectician, and other musical stars will be heard each Sunday succeeding the "Life Is a Song" series.

Hylton came to America six months ago, leaving an enthusiastic European following that had heard him in London's Piccadilly Hotel for three years; in its Alhambra Theater for a 33-week run; at the Palladium and at the Paris Opera House, where his performance of a Stravinsky composition, written especially for him, marked the only appearance in history of a popular music conductor in that famed French center of classical music.

His orchestra now is an all-American one which he has spent weeks training in his own musical tradition so that it is as typically Hylton in style as the one he left in England.

Hylton made his musical debut at the age of seven as a "Singing Mill Boy." Ten years later, he was directing the "pit" orchestra of a traveling opera company. He credits his present distinctive orchestral style to his opera training. At the age of 18, Hylton went to London, became pianist in a dance band, and, within four months was conducting it. His debut as conductor was made at Queen's Hall Cabaret, which soon became a popular dance place.

O'Malley's first singing was done in London glee clubs and church choirs. He was planning at the time to enter the fur business but soon abandoned this idea in favor of a musical career. Pat began singing in cafes and night clubs, developing his present style of ballad singing and humorous recitation.

Although Templeton is a student of classical music, his remarkable ability at jazz interpretation enables him to present medleys of popular and classical works which have established him as a star of American radio in less than six months. The blind pianist has been with Hylton since he graduated from Worcester College, in Wales, two years ago.

Colossal Statues, the World Around, Mirror Man's Ancient Dream of Glory

The gigantic statue of Christ which stands on the peak of Corcovada overlooking the harbor and city of Rio de Janeiro. The statue is made of concrete and is 100 feet tall.

A monolithic figure from the Solomon Islands, a symbol from a lost race, which was presented to Queen Victoria and is now in the British Museum.

Some of These Sculptured Giants Are Ages Old, Others of Recent Birth

By Charles d'Emery.

IN THE DIM past, many thousand years ago, when man first learned how to make an image of himself, he conceived the idea of perpetuating his greatness to future generations, by building gigantic monuments in stone.

These very often were vast temples dedicated to mighty gods, but more often man's vanity took the form of colossal statues. This was especially true of the Egyptian rulers. Colossi of deities, on the other hand, were usually erected by the people or a king as a symbol of the god's past, and future favors.

Modern colossi have been erected or sculptured to impress future generations of the great deeds done in these days. Fundamentally, however, the primitive principle is still the same—to show future generations the greatness of our heroes and our deeds. Mankind has seen that the span of life in the mediocre is short, it is easily destroyed by the hand of man and time.

Colossal statues, on the other hand, were left standing because their very size discourage destruction, and because mankind has always liked the things that are extraordinary. This trait of humanity has saved to posterity many things that would otherwise have been destroyed.

The only colossus totally destroyed in the last 2,500 years is that of Rhodes, and the reason is not hard to guess, for it was cast in fine bronze. It stood with legs apart at the entrance to the Harbor of the Galleys for a little over 50 years, about 300 B. C., when an earthquake tumbled it to the ground. For eight centuries it lay upon the shores of the bay, but the Saracens knowing the value of bronze for the making of weapons, cut it into sections and sold it for good gold.

* * * *

GIGANTIC stone statues, on the other hand, although often broken up, are almost valueless for other purposes, and have therefore remained undisturbed for scores of centuries, many of them being the only relic of people that have lived upon this earth in remote ages. The gigantic stone statues on Easter Island are a good example, for the present inhabitants know nothing about them, and the people that carved them are a mystery to the archeologists. Some of the statues on Easter Island are more than 35 feet in height and weigh several hundred tons.

The top of the heads were all cut flat, so that stone crowns could be placed upon them. Some of these crowns have been found in the ancient quarries and are 10 feet in diameter. The photograph of the Easter Island monolith is of an ancient king, and judging from the determination of his set jaw, evidently the dictator once upon a time of the South Seas.

IN the great Temple of Luxor, the Court of Ramases II has many statues of the great king, some of them cut from the finest of red granite and highly polished. This granite had to be floated down the Nile for over 200 miles. The figures are 26 feet in height and each weighs several hundred tons.

In the Far East, on the way to the Ming Tombs of the north, there is an avenue of gigantic stone figures of animals and of generals of the great Ming, that still guard the approach to his sacred tomb.

At Kamakura, Japan, is another masterpiece in bronze, the colossal statue of Buddha, the favorite Japanese divinity. It is 50 feet in height, and 97 feet in circumference. The face is 8½ feet long. It was cast in 1252. Originally a great temple surrounded it, but in 1369 a great tidal wave swept away the gigantic temple building and left the statue unharmed.

Among the modern colossi we have the Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth, Mass., representing Liberty and Justice. The Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, the Battle Monument of the Marne in France, and in Rio de Janeiro the 100-foot statue of Christ, standing at the very peak of Corcovada, overlooking the city and its magnificent harbor. The unusual feature of this statue is the fact that it was cast in concrete. Between the Chilean and the Argentine border on top of the Andes is another monument of Christ, surrounded by mountainous peaks and inscribed with one of the world's finest thoughts—"Ere shall these mountains crumble into the dust before we break the peace which we pledge to each other here at the feet of the Redeemer."

One of the statues of Ramses II at the Luxor Temple Court, Egypt. The figure is 26 feet high and was carved from red granite and highly polished.

The Marne Battle Monument, one of the most striking examples of modern memorial sculpture, stands as impervious to the elements as the work of the ancients.

FIDEI AC VIRTUTI

The Lion Monument of Lucerne which commemorates the officers and men of the famous Swiss Guard who were slain defending the Tuileries in Paris in 1792.

Another of the new War Memorials which have been erected in recent years. This one, a masterpiece in marble, towers above the historic streets of Algeria, Algiers.

Native Art of American Indian Develops Under Patronage of Federal Government

These two interesting paintings of ceremonial customs of the Navajo (left) and Sioux tribes were done from memory by Indian students in the United States Indian School at Santa Fe, N. Mex. The pict ures are currently on view at the Brooklyn Museum in New York.

Progress of Work Shown At Exhibit in Brooklyn

Paintings of Students at Santa Fe School Are All Original: Tribesmen From Southwest Depict Early Life in That Section.

By Harold Rhodenbaugh.

While the Government is sponsoring an important movement in mural and easel painting, in an effort to give the public an art which interprets the Nation, the native artist—the Indian—is getting his opportunity to express himself.

This activity is forcefully presented in the current exhibition in the Brooklyn Museum, New York, of paintings by American Indians working in the United States Indian School, Sante Fe, New Mexico. Of interest is the fact that the artists average about 15 years of age. All paintings are original, the students drawing from memory and imagination.

A majority of the students are from the Southwestern tribes—Pueblo, Navajo and Apache—and their home life as a rule is much the same as it was before the Spanish conquest. Hence they have little trouble drawing and painting in the traditional manner of their forefathers. But the Plains Indians have had much difficulty in arriving at a medium of expression since they have become Americanized.

Act of the Plains.

The Plains students know nothing of the customs of their tribes. As a result they have had to study Bureau of Ethnology reports, museum publications, photographic and sketched material on early home life. Sometimes a fragment of information will call to a child's mind a tale of old customs told to him by a grandparent and an idea for a painting grows as a result. Thus it is seen that a great amount of knowledge of tribal culture is told from genertion to generation. These children are trying to put their heritage down in a form which cannot be distorted or misconstrued by outsiders. They are doing it for their own people as well as for others.

This art produced by the children is not merely a representation of their historic background, but instead is an interpretation of the modern scene. New forms are developed through knowledge of the old.

Good Art Studied.

One of the strongest aids in counteracting wrong influences has proved to be showing and explaining to the students good art of many different races and countries. This has been done through exhibitions of color prints of modern and classic art. The students have an understanding of the purpose and a respect for the work of other artists, and do not attempt to copy anything they see in them. They are enabled to see their own work as an art among arts and to gain a better balance and judgment by studying other artists.

Of interest is the co-operative spirit shown by the Indian artists, a tradition of Indian communities. Older students help the younger in matters of correct detail, for instance.

Pueblo painting is an ancient art, going back into the history of the Southwest Indians virtually to its beginning. Art is synonymous with life, to the Indian. Hence their art is still a very living thing. It is elemental, and real, and is felt deeply, though not always understood at first glance.

New Painting School.

Some people speak of this Indian art as a "new school of painting." Actually, it is at once America's oldest and one of her youngest arts. It is oldest in the sense that the Indians have painted for centuries for themselves, and one of the youngest because only within the past few years have they been putting down their ancient truths, in modern media, for other people.

Opaque water color is today the favorite pigment of the pueblo painter because it peculiarly suits his flat, direct, simple style, which is traditionally lacking in light and shade. Many of the effects derived in past centuries from earth and vegetable colors he can obtain with this newer medium.

In all phases of the pueblo painter's work there is evident a keen observation and appreciation of Nature. He poses no models, studies no drawing, anatomy, perspective or complex theory.

Amazing Composition.

His often amazing composition is a result of his long appreciation of beautiful arrangements in Nature, and his frequently powerful and accurate draughtsmanship has been acquired mainly by his having looked beyond the outside of things he has seen around him all his life. Although he usually paints a wealth of intricate detail, his work is seldom cluttered, for he knows how to select.

The art of the pueblo Indian is universal. He catches the vibrant, elusive spirit of life forces and forms—the ancient cloud and sun, his brother animals, himself, impersonally, in all his activities—and shows them to be more real than they ordinarily seem outside the painting. In this respect his interpretation has much more than mere racial significance.

Corcoran Starts Exhibition Of President's Naval Objects

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

So many people have been anxious to see President Roosevelt's collection of old marine prints, ship pictures and ship models which has been on display in the upper corridor, the President's study, and the Monroe room in the White House, ever since the Roosevelts moved in, that an exhibition has been installed, at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

This exhibition opened yesterday with a private view to which special guests were invited. It will be open today and will continue through Sunday, May 3.

The exhibition has been arranged in four rooms of the Clark wing of the Corcoran. Before he left for his vacation trip the President made suggestions as to which prints and models should be grouped together. The authorities of the Corcoran Gallery have endeavored to follow these instructions. There are 192 prints and etchings, oil and water color paintings and 12 ship models.

The group of oil paintings from the President's study are mostly of World War naval subjects. "The Surrender of the German Fleet to the Grand Fleet," with Admiral Sims and Admiral Rodman among the important personages on the deck of the U. S. S. New York, was painted in post-war days by Bernard F. Gribble. The "Return of the Mayflower," by Mr. Gribble, is the original of a large painting of the same subject, now hanging in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. It represents the first American destroyers sent overseas during the World War approaching Queenstown Island, May 1917.

"The President's Family," painted in the White House in 1934, by John C. Johansen, has been included in the exhibition, because it shows the President's study with his ship pictures hanging on the walls. Another painting in the World War picture group is that by Edmund S. Mayer, showing a U. S. transport carrying United States Marines to France, June, 1917.

Unique among the pictures of ships are those artistically wrought in embroidery, or developed in relief in plaster, silk and paper. "British Frigate" is done in thread with cream sails, dark hull and a blue and white ocean and has small pearl beads for port holes. A group of covers for songs with ship lithographs on them, are dated about the middle of the nineteenth century. One of the most interesting is the U. S. S. Constitution, lithographed in 1850 as a cover for the song, "The Leap For Life," which had a vogue in that day.

A group of three Japanese prints are considered among the rarest in the collection. These include a port scene "The Visit of Commodore Perry to Japan to Negotiate the First Treaty Opening That Country"; "An American Steam Frigate" and a "Mississippi River Boat."

A colorful lithograph by N. Currier, dated 1844, depicts the historic explosion on the Princeton in 1844. It is captioned "Awful Expulsion of the Gun 'Peace Maker' on Board the U. S. S. Frigate Princeton, 1844." Among the historic figures to be seen in this print are President Tyler and Julia Gardner who became the wife of President Tyler.

A design of a clipper ship "The Nightingale" in a hooked rug is among the oddities of the collection.

Studio House Exhibiting Smaller Canvases Only

Group of Artists Well Known in D. C. Show Work.

That small pictures can have all the charm or the intensity of larger canvases, and often express a meaning more concentrated, is the definite impression one carries away from the current showing at Studio House.

A group of artists, well known in this locality, have painted pictures especially for the exhibition to help carry out the plan of presenting small canvasses of real quality, that may be acquired by collectors at no extravagant cost. For instance, the idea of commissioning a portrait is too often set aside because of the impracticability of ordering a life size, ancestral canvas.

But the exquisite little portraits, no more than 12 by 18 inches, which Donald Coale exhibits are disarmingly small. The size is portable and appropriate for the small modern house or apartment.

Coale has used a process of glazing which is altogether successful and makes for an unusual richness and depth of tone. The glaze gives a surface almost like enamel, and is particularly charming in the miniature dimensions of his portraits. His "Memory Portrait of Julia," loaned by the Phillips Memorial Gallery, is full of grace and subtle delicacy.

Cross Miniatures.

Bernice Cross has painted canvasses even smaller than Mr. Coalez, using figures in various settings as her subjects. There is an individual quality of great charm in all of Miss Cross's work. Her people seem storybook characters, who live in a fantastic world of gay and colorful lengend. Her little painting of a Dickens-like old gentleman struggling with an immense umbrella on a gusty street corner has delightful poetry of expression. "In the Fields," another small canvas, is painted with brighter colors and one feels a freedom of manner, guided by a real knowledge of form.

The Baltimore painter, Edward Rosenfeld, has a number of amusing and competent small pictures done in oil, both on paper and canvas. He uses a variety of subject matter, from such homely objects as telephones, stoves, and kitchen sinks, to a musician playing, or a country landscape. His point of view is always original and he shows a fine flair for the use of interesting and subtle color combinations. His "M Street Market" is painted in a strong and lively manner, showing the ever increasing depth and richness in his colors.

From Baltimore also comes the work of Herman Maril, an artist, who has frequently exhibited in Washington. His work has always been expressed in a sophisticated manner, and he has been developing an extremely personal idiom in his painting. However, it would seem from his latest pictures that he has, for the moment, arrived at the end of his rope. He is now painting again and again in the same formula, and there is no feeling of development or growth in his work.

John Gernand shows several canvases painted in his very individual color. For so young a painter he has done some nice work, and his "Marine Still Life" is well designed. His method of painting very thinly, leaving large areas of the canvas untouched, gives an agreeable lightness to his pictures. "The Blue Dress," by Marie Sommaripa, shows the work of a sensitive painter, and the picture has a nice atmospheric quality. Marjorie Phillips shows two small oils, painted around 1923 in Paris. Aaron Sopher, Caroline Heald and Dwight Williams, also contribute to the group. In addition, Studio House shows several water Colors by Mme. Halicka, the Polish painter.

Studies by Grant.

Quite different from the rest of the work on exhibition are the large mural studies by Gordon Kenneth Grant. The panels are oil on gesso, which is always an interesting surface, quite similar to fresco. Grant is a young Californian, at present commisisoned to paint a mural in the Ventura (Calif.) Postoffice, under the Treasury Department Art Program. His work has been much admired by Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, who arranged to send from California the panels now on view at Studio House. The subjects are of American Indians, quite in the Mexican manner.

Grant has a sculptural feeling in the drawing of the heads in these panels, and weaves his figures into a highly decorative pattern. The panel of the "Hopi Eagle Dance" is particularly strong and successful in design. In "Indian Crafts" he has used the motif of a cornfield in conventionalized manner. The spear heads of the corn, the leaves and the stalks are arranged in a repeating pattern across the picture. This design would lend itself successfully to iron work, and a grille after this corn pattern would be an interesting architectural feature of the building for which the murals are planned.

Local Painter Exhibits Work

22 Water Colors by Mary Riley on Display at Corcoran Gallery.

An exhibition of 22 water colors by Mary Riley, Washington artist, has been installed in the cases on the second floor of the Corcoran Gallery of Art. The paintings are mostly landscapes made in this country and in Mexico and South America. The use of horses and other animals to give accent to the composition add an original note to these pictures.

Miss Riley paints in a clear decided manner and has a good sense of color. She studied oil painting under Birge Harrison and Henry B. Snell and water color under Eliot O'Hara.

She received the Bronze medal of the Washington Society of Artists in 1923; purchase prize of the National Arts Club of New York in 1928; Penman Memorial prize, National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors, 1930, and medal for landscapes, Society of Washington Artists, 1932.

English Artists Exhibiting Here

Aletha and Anne Harcourt Show Landscapes at Newspaper Club.

Two English painters, Aletha and Anne Harcourt, are exhibiting portraits and landscapes this week at the Newspaper Women's Club at 1640 Rhode Island avenue. The Misses Harcourt have the unusual method of both working on the same portrait, but as their technique is much the same they are able to correct and develop each other's work without harming the effect of the picture. They are showing several portraits of members of Washington diplomatic society.

In a central position is the large and competent portrait of Jonkheer Haersma de With, the Minister from the Netherlands, realistically painted in full uniform. There is also the colorful portrait of Mme. Rajamaitri, wife of the Siamese Minister; of Mr. Edward Weintal, Attache of the Polish Embassy, and a portrait sketch of Jokheer H. M. van der Wyck of the Netherlands Legation.

This "Hopei Eagle Dance" is one of the decorative panels by Gordon Kenneth Grant, now on view at Studio House. Grant uses oil on gesso, getting an effect similar to frescoes.

Mrs. Roberts Woods Bliss is much interested in Grant and arranged that all the panels in the exhibition be sent here from the young artist's home in California.

. . . Camera

Conducted by Rho.

This is the week when everyone with a camera all the way from the 8-mm. motion picture machine to the 8x10 view will journey to the Tidal Basin and get various and sundry pictures of the flowering cherry trees, expected to be at their best today and for several days more.

When flowers are photographed one runs into the sometimes knotty problem of color values and here one meets up with the problem of filters. Some photographers spurn the disks of colored glass fitted over the lens and still others are equipped with a battery of them. This is a field of photography which offers fascinating opportunities for unusual effects; and filters, too, will give a better photograph, if properly used. First, here is a bit of advice worth noting (courtesy of the April issue of Camera Craft):

"There are three main colors—
Red, green and blue;
Any one of these
Will absorb the other two."

Having memorized this ditty, bear in mind that yellow absorbs blue and the majority of your filter worries will be over. This sounds rather unbelievable, but a brief analysis bears it out. For instance, if you take a picture (say of the cherry-tree blossoms, the Tidal Basin in the foreground, and the Monument and some sky in the background) you will get an ordinary, uninteresting negative without use of a filter. With a medium yellow filter using orthochromatic film or a light green filter for panchromatic film, you will get a color correction for the blue sky. As a result, the contrast between the white and pink blooms against the sky will be increased—the blue sky will be held back and will appear darker than the flowers. Use of a filter will result in a picture with a more even value of colors, as interpreted black and white, of course.

Also, use of a filter, either yello or green, will hold back the bl rays in the shadow pattern of t pictures. As a result more det will be obtained. If you use a filt be sure you know the exact fact for the one you will use. This usually easily obtainable from i formation supplied the manufa turer. There are a number of i expensive publications which di cuss filters at length.

During the coming summ months you will find that use of f ters will enhance the beauty your pictures, no matter what th subject, since almost any subje will have a predominance of bl light in it, usually reflected fr the sky, though not readily visib to the eye. As for obtaining corre exposure, you must either learn experiment or use an exposure m ter, the latter being one of t greatest aids you can enlist in yo pursuit of photography.

Now that this is April, it is virt ally no time at all until the Seco International Leica exhibit, due May 12, in the Willard Hotel.

This outstanding photograp show is particularly of interest t year because of a special local Le contest which is to be conducted a part of the exhibition. The prints are to be submitted to t show at the Willard Hotel on Mo day, May 11, and will be judged vote of visitors. Prints submitt are not to be larger than 11x inches, nor smaller than 8x10 inch

Writers League.

The Writers League will meet at Thomson School Thursday at 8:15 p. m. There will be stories by Mrs. Hugh M. Irish, Miss Katherine M. Hopson and Mr. Mayne R. Coe. Verse will be given by Miss Georgia Redway, and Mr. Charles Cottingham will read from his South American travel notes.

National Symphony Orchestra Will Give Request Program in Last Appearance Today

Annual Program Vote Is Heaviest in Years

Brahms and Tchaikovsky Are Popular With Symphony Patrons; Former's First Symphony Wins Over Latter's Sixth by Only 664 to 648.

Making its final appearance of the season, the National Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Hans Kindler, will play the annual "request" program at 4 o'clock this afternoon in Constitution Hall. The voting of patrons for the compositions which they desired to hear at the last concert was the heaviest and most spirited of any of the "elections" which the orchestra has held. Final tabulation of the ballots has resulted in the selection of the following program:

Overture to "Egmont" (Beethoven), "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor" (Brahms), symphonic suite, "Circles of Washington" (R. Deane Shure), "Allegro con Grazia," from "Symphony No. 6" (Chaikovski), Intermezzo from "I gioielli della Madonna" (Wolf-Ferrari), excerpts from "Boris Godunov" (Musorgski).

The closest contest occurred between the first symphony of Brahms and the sixth of Chaikovski, the former winning by 664 points to 648. The victory for Brahms was significant, not only because Chaikovski's "Pathetique" is an exceedingly popular work at present, but also because the advocates of Brahms divided their votes among three of his symphonies, the second receiving 214 points, while a large number of ballots were cast for the fourth.

Chaikovski Included.

In deference to the wishes of the Chaikovski adherents, Dr. Kindler placed on the program the second movement from the "Pathetique."

A feature of the voting this year was the marked interest in the music of major proportions. More votes were cast for symphonies and symphonic poems than for any other class of composition. Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony received 504 points, and 130 were recorded for the first symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, which had its local premiere this season. The Franck symphony and Schubert's B minor ranked high in the balloting.

The competition in the symphonic poem division resulted in eight works receiving more than 100 votes each. Next to Shure's "Circles of Washington," which won with 588 points, came Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" with 364. Smetana's "The Moldau" was given 352 points, and the suite from "Carmen" 223. Other works high in this group were Chaikovski's "Romeo and Juliet," Strauss' "Don Juan," Bach's Suite in B minor, and Sibelius' "En Saga."

In the overture division, the "Egmont" was followed most closely by "Lohengrin," which received 310 points. Among the next five, each of which polled more than 200 points, was Edward C. Potter's elegiac overture, "Chatterton."

Miscellaneous Requests.

The excerpts from "Boris Godunov" led the large field of miscellaneous requests. This arrangement by Dr. Kindler received 270 points to 188 for Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune" and 186 for Wagner's "Walkurenritt."

The point system, used this year for the first time, enabled patrons the opportunity to list both first and second choices. First choice counted two points, and second choice one. So eager were some voters to place their favorite work on the program that they listed it as both first and second choice.

This year's request program affords an interesting comparison with last year's inasmuch as not a single work will be repeated. Last year the winning compositions were Mozart's overture to "Die Zauberfloete," Schubert's B minor symphony, Wagner's "Walkurenritt," the slow movement from Dvorak's E minor symphony, Brahms' first Hungarian dance, Sibelius' "Finlandia," and the Johann Strauss waltz, "Artists' Life."

Ravel's monotonous "Bolero," once so popular, received only six votes this year, thus subsiding to its proper place as a mere instrumental tour de force.

The National Symphony Orchestra spent the last five days on tour, playing a request program in Baltimore on Tuesday, a concert at Duke University on Wednesday, and two programs on Friday and Saturday at a music festival in Columbia, S. C. To insure the return of the organization in time for this afternoon's concert, Manager C. C. Cappel chartered a special train from Columbia.

Capacity House Awaiting Debut Of Nelson Eddy

Stage Space Already Taken Also to Hear Barytone Here on Sunday.

Nelson Eddy, the poular American barytone, will make his recital debut in Washington next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Constitution Hall, under the management of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. He will be heard by a capacity audience, as the house has been sold out for the past two months, even to 200 seats on the stage.

While Mr. Eddy is expected to offer a number of encores of popular character, his recital will be devoted to art-songs. He will open his program with a quaint composition by Francis Hopkinson, one of the earliest American composers. It is the "Ode from Ossian's Poems," in five parts: "Pleasant Is Thy Voice, O Carrell;" "O, Strike the Harp in Praise of My Love," "Dost Thou Raise Thy Fair Face?" "Retire, My Love, for It Is Night," and "For I Will Not Return."

Francis Hopkinson (1737-1791) was a native and life-long resident of Philadelphia. An attorney by profession, he was a musician and poet by avocation. One of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, he was an active supporter of the cause of liberty through his prose and poetic satires. His "Seven Songs" (1788) was the first book of music published by an American composer. His son, Joseph Hopkinson, wrote the words of "Hail, Columbia."

Among the items on Mr. Eddy's program are: "Du bist so jung" (Eric Wolff), "Vergebliches Staendchen" (Brahms), "Morgen" and "Caecilie" (Richard Strauss), the recitative and aria, "Vanne! La tua meta gia vedo" from "Otello" (Verdi), "Pilgrim's Song" (Chaikovski), "Route Marchin'" (George Chadwick Stock), "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal" (Roger Quilter), and "Love Went a-Riding" (Frank Bridge).

Mr. Eddy's assisting artist and accompanist is Theodore Paxson, who will contribute Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor.

Cuban Soprano Coming to City

Emma Otero and Ernesto Berumen Will Appear in Joint Recital on May 4.

Two brilliant exponents of Spanish and Latin-American music, Emma Otero, Cuban floritura soprano, and Ernesto Berumen, Mexican pianist, will give a joint recital in the Willard Hotel ballroom on Wednesday night, May 29, as the second presentation by Washington's new concert bureau, Beren-Brook Artists.

Both these musicians enjoy a reputation which extends over the cultural centers of North and South America, and they have appeared individually in frequent tours. In New York and vicinity they have won enthusiastic receptions in joint costume recitals, featuring all-Spanish programs.

Emma Otero, who is frequently referred to as "La Belle Otero," was discovered by Beniamino Gigli in Havana. On his advice, she came to the United States several years ago, and after coaching with Frank La Forge, made a successful debut in Carnegie Hall. One critic declared that "she solved the problem of where the next floritura prima donna is to come from."

Schadel Will Conduct Choir of Foundry M. E.

In co-operation with Justin Lawrie, choirmaster of Foundry M. E. Church, William F. Schadel, of the Washington Missionary College in Takoma Park, will conduct the Foundry choir, augmented by the Treble Clef Club of 35 girls and the Men's Glee Club of 28 voices in a musical service at 7:45 o'clock this evening. The college orchestra of 35 will participate.

Among the choral numbers to be sung is a "Gloria," by Mozart, and Haydn's "The Heavens Are Telling." Henry S. Gregor will be at the organ. The orchestra will play selections from three standard symphonies, closing with the second movement from Schubert's B minor.

Federal Music Projects in New York Surveyed

Subjects Taught Under U. S. Direction Cover Broadened Field.

System Is Operated So as to Discourage Any Dilettantism.

For the information of those who are interested in the work being carried on by the Federal Music Project, which is a subdivision of the Works Progress Administration, a brief survey is offered of the situation in New York City. Various advantages are made available to the public in educational and social music centers, in extra-curricular activities, and in the concerts furnished by the recital bureau.

The educational centers, by right of seniority, deserve first consideration. These centers number 35 in the several boroughs of the city. A recent report shows a weekly attendance of 16,835, with 200 teachers. The subjects taught cover practically every aspect of musical knowledge and practice from sight singing to conducting, and from the history of music to piano tuning.

The students range in age from 6 to 70 years. In certain schools there are both children and adult classes. Central Manhattan music center in Harlem, has an adult school in the mornings and evenings, while the children's classes are held from 3:30 to 7:30. Other centers, such as the school at West Side Vocational High School, which started as an experiment in correlated courses sponsored by the board of education, and Midtown Community Music Center at 93 Park avenue, are for adults only.

Dilettantism Discouraged.

If one has a picture of crowds of people flocking to these free centers for a superficial smattering of musical knowledge, even a hasty visit to these schools would dissipate that idea. Courses are so organized as to discourage dilettantism. A student coming for a slight acquaintance with piano, violin or voice, soon discovers that he does not belong. Correlated theoretical subjects are part of the necessary curriculum. He must learn to listen, to analyze, even to create, as well as to play or sing. The seriousness of the students is their outstanding characteristic.

Students have ample opportunity to bring their work before audiences in the student assemblies, which range from instrumental and vocal soloists to choral and orchestral groups. Recently students from the central Manhattan school in Harlem gave a concert in the 135th St. Y. M. C. A., presenting a program of solos, choruses and instrumental numbers by an orchestra of 35 youths from 8 to 18 years of age.

Social music activities, numbering 115 centers, are conducted in conjunction with welfare houses, hospitals and public schools. In these centers, 42 courses are available, including ear training, sight singing, acoustics, accompanying, brass and woodwind instruments, counterpoint, composition, chorus, coaching, diction (English, French, Italian and German), form and analysis, fretted instruments, piano ensemble, organ, operettas, pageants, string instruments and folk music.

A recent report of the social music centers shows a weekly attendance of 29,451 receiving instruction from 136 teachers.

There are innumerable requests for recitals and concerts from welfare agencies. To supply this demand the recital bureau employs 176 artists: vocalists, violinists, violists, violoncellists, pianists, harpists —all classifications of musicians suitable for presenting solo or small ensemble programs.

Attendance 100,000.

A typical month totaled 375 rehearsals, 230 concerts and 135 broadcasts over Municipal Station WYNC. An estimated monthly audience of 100,000 is reached by recital bureau artists. From 30 to 50 requests for concerts have to be refused each month for lack of sufficient number of groups to give the programs. There are 11 small concert groups of from three to nine artists each, and three large units: the Madrigal Society, with 16 members; the chamber opera group with 20, and the grand opera group with 40.

The final branch of the music education unit of the Federal project comes under the comprehensive title of extra-curriculur activities. This division offers to the general public concerts, forums on various subjects, prehearings of new works, comments and illustrations by Postley Sinclair on the programs of the WPA orchestra, lecture recitals, music appreciation, music history, chorus, orchestra, chamber music club, discussion groups, the Composers' Forum-Laboratory, and Lehman Engel's illustrated course of the evolution of music.

Mr. Engel's course begins with madrigal singing of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and traverses the entire development of music to the present day. It is being presented in six different centers to reach as large a number of auditors as possible.

Of the Composers' Forum-Laboratory much has been written. It meets every Wednesday night in the auditorium of the Federal Music Building, 110 West Forty-eighth street. It has already been successful in attracting and retaining audiences genuinely interested in contemporary music. A library of American works is being collected with the idea in mind that similar libraries will be formed in other cities, and that exchange concerts may be established. A forum-laboratory, patterned after the one begun in New York last October, was opening in Boston late in March.

The personnel of all Government departments, and any others who are interested in this observance of Good Friday, are invited to attend. Cards of admission must be obtained by writing to the secretary of the chorus, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Harned Directing National Choir Today

Under the direction of Dr. Albert W. Harned, the National Capital Choir will present an unusual and interesting vesper service at 4:30 this afternoon in the Universalist National Memorial Church, Sixteenth and S streets northwest. The Passion episode from the second part of Handel's "The Messiah," and Bach's motet, "Jesus, Priceless Treasure," will be sung. The soloists are Irene Koehl, Minerva Rude, Jessie Masters and Eugene Dahl. Malton Boyce is the guest organist.

Of the motets composed by Bach which have come down to us, this is the only one in five-part form. It is also the most varied and covers the widest emotional range. It is founded on the hymn, "Jesus, Mein Freund," by Johannes Franck, and the melody which Bach used as the principal theme is the one composed for the hymn by Johann Cruger. The motet seems to have been written in 1723, the year that Bach was installed as cantor at the Thomasschule in Leipzig. It is believed that today's will be the first complete offering of the motet in Washington.

Record of 'Die Walkure' Treat for Wagner Fans

Hearing Music of First Act From Disc Is Likened to Operagoer Who Appreciates It Better for Not Being in Position to See Stage.

A New York opera fan, arriving at the Metropolitan too late for the curtain rise on one of the Wagner dramas, waited in the foyer for the first scene to end.

From that remote point he could not see the stage at all, but heard plainly all that took place on the stage and in the orchestra pit. While standing there his eyes wandered to another operagoer occupying space in the standing room.

This fellow was sitting on the steps, his forehead resting on his two fists. From this attitude he never moved during the first act—maybe not during the performance of the whole opera.

Although beyond the range of vision, that man was "seeing" more of the opera than many within the auditorium. Such are the powers of the perfect, or would-be perfect, Wagnerite. A burst of the master's music on his ears is better for him than thousands of dollars worth of scenery to the unitiated.

Record Commended.

For such a devotee is the new Victor recording of the first act of "Die Walkure." At least we thought of him while playing it last week. There's only one drawback to his utter contentment—the second and third acts are not in the album. And if a desire for more was ever implanted in the heart of enraptured spectator, Wagner did it at the moment he gave Siegmund to understand that Sieglinde was not only the young and winsome hostess with whom he was in love, but also his twin sister. It is at that moment, of course, that the curtain falls.

But everything else, except the actual seeing, that one might be offered at the opera house has been captured on these records, listed incidentally as Album M-298. Fine voices they belong to Lotte Lehman, Sieglinde; Lauritz Melchior, Siegmund, and Emanuel List, Hunding. A fine conductor—Bruno Walter; a fine orchestra—the Vienna Philharmonic, and a reproduction that gets the music so completely; the voices ring as though loosed from the stage of a theater and the orchestra resounds as though before a large instrument board.

Enunciation Clear.

The enunciation throughout is so clear that the listener who knows his German is all set—Wagnerite, or no. For the non-German there is the complete libretto (German and English) furnished at no extra cost.

The remarkable thing about this Wagner music, after all the talk there's been about its fogginess, is its clarity—even simplicity. There isn't a theme introduced without dramatic significance, and, as Ernest Newman has noted, once Wagner hit on a motive to symbolize a character, or a piece of dramatic action, he never let go of it. Hunding's motive shadows him from the time of his entrance to the end; and well it might, for it's one of the mightiest thumbnail sketches ever penned. The sword, around which so much of the action in The Ring epic centers, is hardly ever mentioned without the orchestra flashing the identifying call.

All this architecture in the Wagnerian plan comes out so plainly in the records. Probably in one act the great plot does not move so fast, and so far we are unable to observe the structural pieces. Of course, these bits are never obvious —that's Wagner—but once noted, they can be traced sooner or later to some vital part of the framework —that's also Wagner. J. W.

The Gondoliers On Community Center Program

Estelle Wentworth Group Will Present Opera in School on April 23.

Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers" will be presented by the Estelle Wentworth Opera Group on Thursday night, April 23, in Roosevelt High School auditorium, under auspices of the Community Center Department. The roles of the two gondoliers will be sung by Ray Baine and Eugene Kressin.

"The Gondoliers," the last work in which Arthur Seymour Sullivan and William Schenck Gilbert collaborated, had its premiere in the Savoy Theater, London, on December 7, 1889, and ran for 534 consecutive performances. The plot makes use of the familiar comic opera situation of a confusion of identities in childhood, and weaves therefrom a series of droll contretemps. The action shifts from Venice to the imaginary kingdom of Barataria. The time is 1750.

The cast of characters includes the Duke and Duchess of Plaza-Toro; their daughter, Casilda; their attendant, Luiz (the missing King of Barataria); Don Alhambra del Bolero, the Grand Inquisitor; Marco and Giuseppe Palmieri, the gondoliers, and Inez, the King's foster mother.

In the two acts are heard a number of delightful ensemble numbers, including "List and Learn, Ye Dainty Roses," "From the Sunny Spanish Shore," "Life's a Pudding Full of Plums," "In a Contemplative Fashion" and "Here Is a Case Unprecedented." Among the solos is the familiar "Take a Pair of Sparkling Eyes."

Mary M. Burnett, soprano; J. Delaney Nash, violinist, and Carrie L. Sanders, pianist, will present the music hour program at 5 o'clock this afternoon in the Y. W. C. A. Readings will be given by Edith Drake.

Act I—"DIE WALKURE"
A new Victor recording by Lotte Lehmann, Lauritz Melchior and Emanuel List with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra
under Bruno Walter

OUT of a spontaneous and all-consuming love—doomed from the moment it flamed to life as Siegmund first saw Sieglinde in the house of her husband, Hunding—Wagner spun music whose like the world had never heard before... It is music that engulfs the emotions with its sheer, sensuous beauty, while it excites the intellect with the bold and unfettered creative imagination of its composer and with the cosmic implications underlying its theme. The complete First Act of this second great opera of the "Ring"—"Die Walküre"—has been preserved for all time by Victor in the voices and music of the top-rank Wagnerian artists of our day.

The cast:
Sieglinde . . . Lotte Lehmann
Siegmund . . Lauritz Melchior
Hunding . . . . Emanuel List with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra under the great Bruno Walter

Here again Victor higher fidelity recording demonstrates its priceless gift to music lovers. Intonation, color, technique—the living quality of greatness in these Wagnerian artists—are perfectly reproduced. Hear this magnificent recording at your dealer's. Recorded on 8 12-inch Victor Red Seal Records, 16 sides. Album, complete with libretto in German and English, $16.00.

Brig. Gen. Roberts Urges Army Reorganization to Create More Efficient Fighting Force

Fort Ontario Commander Suggests Drastic Shake-Up

Infantry Division Would Be Reduced to 11,422 Men and 608 Officers; General Doesn't Want Manpower Used to Make Up for Lack of Training.

By the Associated Press.

Reorganization of the entire Army to create a speedier, more efficient fighting machine was urged last week by Brig. Gen. Charles D. Roberts, commanding officer of Fort Ontario, N. Y.

To accomplish this Roberts recommended drastic reductions in the size and make-up of existing units, simplification of command, and motorization and rearming of the infantry—the "backbone" of the Army.

Under Roberts' plan outlined in the Infantry Journal, the size of the infantry division would be reduced to 11,422 men and 608 officers—less than half the present strength—and a similar slashing and regrouping would be followed all down through regiments, companies, battalions and squads.

The plan was evolved, through his 39 years experience in the Spanish-American War, Philippine Insurrection, Vera Cruz Expedition in Mexico, World War and service as director of the Infantry Board.

"When he entered the World War," Roberts said, "we had available a tremendous reservoir of untrained manpower. Rightly or wrongly we used this manpower with the utmost lavishness to make up for our lack of experience and training.

"Our division of 28,000 men was almost double the strength of the French and British divisions. Everybody admitted that it was too large and unwieldy, and at the end of the war it was cut down to under 20,000 men. Since then it has been gradually enlarged until it has a paper strength of 25,000 men."

"Since the World War," he added, "advances in mechanization and motorization, on the ground and in the air, and in methods of communication, make practicable the rapid movement of troops to the battlefield and on the battlefield, increasing mobility and creative new problems. These problems make it evident that complete reorganization and re-equipment of our fighting division is necessary."

The Navy Department announced that the following changes in command of major divisions of the United States Fleet were effected last week at San Diego, Calif.

Admiral William D. Leahy, United States Navy, relieved Admiral Harris Laning as commander of battle force and hoisted his flag on the U. S. S. California. Admiral Laning will assume the duties of commandant Third Naval District, headquarters, New York on May 1.

Vice Admiral Clarence S. Kempff, United States Navy, relieved Admiral Leahy as commander battleships, battle force, and hoisted his three-starred flag in the U. S. S. Virginia.

Rear Admiral Edward B. Fenner, United States Navy, relieved Admiral Kempff as commander battleship division 1, and hoisted his flag in the U. S. S. Texas.

Other changes in high fleet commands will take place after the fleet returns to the San Diego-San Pedro area upon completion of maneuvers early in June.

Brattain Named To Air Line Post

Eastern Air Lines Executive Elected Chairman on Traffic and Sales.

At a recent meeting of the Air Transport Association of America, Paul M. Brattain, general traffic manager of Eastern Air Lines, was elected chairman of the traffic and sales committee. The newly formed Air Transport Association is composed of not only the large but the smaller air lines of the country for the purpose of dealing with the problems of air transportation by co-operative effort.

Paul Brittain's wide experience in aviation particularly qualifies him for the duty of guiding the association's traffic and sales committee. A graduate of George Washington University and the University of Pittsburgh, he holds two scientific degrees. During the war he was an Army Air Corps engineer and afterward a consulting engineer in Washington for aircraft and engine manufacturers.

He then became the Washington representative for the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce and in 1929 resigned to become vice president of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. Five years later he was elected vice president and a director of North American Aviation, Inc., actively engaged as assistant general manager and general traffic manager of the Eastern Air Lines division, which positions he now holds.

Eastern Air Lines operates from New York to Miami and via Atlanta to New Orleans; also from Chicago to Miami and New Orleans via Atlanta. As assistant general manager and general traffic manager of this company, one of the country's four air transport systems, Paul Brattain is thoroughly familiar with air-line management and development. His experience guarantees that a competent perspective will be applied to the directing of the Air Transport Association's traffic and sales committee.

Thomason Act Operation Awaits Necessary Funds

Bill to Provide Money for Plan Is Now Before Congress.

Of interest to District Reserve officers is the War Department appropriation bill now before Congress governing the assignment of officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps to active duty under the Thomason act.

In the event sufficient funds are appropriated by the Congress to put into the Thomason act, the plan given below will be used for the initial selection of the 1,000 yearly trainees.

The act provides that the War Department shall select each year not to exceed 1,000 Reserves officers for service in the Regular Army for a term not to exceed ten years, beginning July 1, 1936. The Secretary of War is authorized to select annually, in addition to the graduates from the United States Military Academy, 50 officers who shall be commissioned in the Regular Army, selected from the Reserve Corps who have received the training specified above.

In case funds for the training of the entire number of 1,000 Reserve officers are not appropriated, then the figures of distribution by sections and by Corps Areas are reduced proportionately.

One hundred and eleven officers will be selected from each corps area under the tentative plan prepared by the War Department. In the Third Corps Area, which is typical, the following division will be made between the various branches: Infantry, 35; Field Artillery, 26; Coast Artillery, 22; Cavalry, 8; Engineers, 8; Signal Corps, 7; Chemical Warfare Service, 5.

On or before the close of the present school year the professor of military science and tactics of each senior R. O. T. C. unit will forward lists showing name, age and residence of Reserve officers commissioned from the institution, arranged in the order of their military efficiency as follows: Graduates of the institution in 1936, graduates of the institution in 1935, nongraduates of the institution commissioned in 1936, nongraduates of the institution commissioned in 1935 and other outstanding former members of the R. O. T. C. of the institution commissioned in the Officers' Reserve Corps prior to 1935 and under 28 years of age on July 1, 1936.

Each professor of military science and tactics will forward one complete set of lists to the commanding general of each corps area.

Each corps area commander may select not to exceed 5 per cent of his allotment from second lieutenants of the Officers' Reserve Corps, graduates of the Citizens' Military Training Camps, subject to the following restrictions: That the officer to be selected shall not have attained the age of 28 years on July 1, 1936; that he have educational qualifications at least equal to two years of a college course.

All other trainees will be selected by corps area commanders from second lieutenants of the Officers' Reserve Corps, graduates of the R. O. T. C., less than 28 years of age on July 1, 1936, in the following priorities: First, 1936 graduates of institutions offering a college degree; second, 1935 graduates of institutions offering a college degree; third, nongraduates of institutions offering a college degree commissioned in 1936; fourth, nongraduates of institutions offering a college degree commissioned in 1935; fifth, other outstanding Reserve second lieutenants commissioned from R. O. T. C. at institutions offering a college degree; sixth, graduates of senior R. O. T. C. units at institution which do not offer a college degree.

The War Department desires that schools be represented among those selected, in so far as practicable, in proportion to the number of R. O. T. C. graduates in the current year from the institution concerned. Corps Area commanders are to consider this factor in making their recommendations.

Lieut. Col. William E. Brougher, senior instructor of the local Reserve units, has announced the following classes of instruction for the coming week: On Tuesday evening Col. Brougher will supervise the instruction of his unit, the 320th Infantry. Maj. I. G. Menikheim will have charge of the senior group of officers lecturing on the "Battalion in Attack," while the junior group of officers will be instructed by platoon leaders. The meeting will be held in the Army Industrial College, in the Munitions Building.

Military Intelligence officers will meet Wednesday evening. The meeting will be conducted by Maj. T. D. Finley, of the G-2 section of the War Department General Staff. Officers of the Ordnance Department and of the 315th Field Artillery will meet Thursday evening, April 9. Majs. Raymond Marsh and S. LeRoy Irwin, Regular Army instructors, will have charge of the conferences.

Two meetings will be conducted on Friday evening for District engineer units.

Law Would Assign 1,000 Reserve Officers to Army Yearly.

Third Fleet Division Leads Race For Cup of Washington Battalion

Reports received this week from the battalion adjutant's office of the First Battalion, United States Naval Reserve, indicate that the Third Fleet Division, Lieut. (J. G.) F. S. Kirk, commanding, is leading the race for the award of the Admiral's Cup. This cup, donated by a group of Naval Reserve officers in the Shipping Board, is awarded annually to the division in the Washington battalion which attains the highest drill attendance. The report further revealed that the First Division, Lieut. (J. G.) J. F. Carpenter commanding, and the Second division, Lieut. J. B. Cleland, jr., commanding, were running a close race for second place.

Officers of the third division include Lieut. (J. G.) W. C. Jennings, executive officer; Ensign W. R. Fifer, platoon engineering officer, and Ensign J. S. Miller, platoon deck officer. Lieut. (J. G.) M. J. Gigy is also attached to this division in the engineering department.

The competition for the three medals awarded each year to the best man in each of the divisions is also very keen, battalion officers have revealed. These awards, given by a group of Naval Reserve officers in the Shipping Board, are made without regard to the rating of the man, but for his value and service to the division.

Results of the inspection held by the battalion for Rear Admiral Joseph R. Defrees, U. S. N., commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, last Thursday night formed the subject of a critique of all officers of the battalion held on Thursday evening in the Navy Yard. The comments of the commandant's inspection were gone over in detail in an effort to clear up all points in preparation for the annual inspection on Friday.

Included in Admiral Defrees' party, which duplicated the procedure to be followed by the Naval Reserve inspection board from the Navy Department at the annual inspection, were Lieut. Comdr. J. R. Sullivan, U. S. N., commanding officer of the receiving station; Lieut. Comdr. L. S. Perry, U. S. N., aid to the commandant, and Lieut. J. P. B. Barrett, U. S. N., officer in charge of the seaman guard at the Navy Yard. Chief Boatswain W. B. Coats, U. S. N., inspected the deck platoons in deck seamanship, knotting and splicing. The inspecting party made detailed comments on the result of the inspection in writing.

A number of the factors which are considered by the inspection board are showing an improvement over last year and all hands are working hard to improve the standing of the Washington battalion. Both drill and cruise attendance which are given high factors in the report of the inspection board are distinctly better than those of last year.

Prior to the inspection last Tuesday night orders advancing two enlisted men in the Third Division were published. Men advanced were J. D. McGregor, from Quartermaster, second class to Quartermaster first class, and . Abramovitz from seaman first class to coxswain.

Drills to be conducted aboard the U. S. S. Leary, destroyer assigned to Naval Reserve training, which comes into the Washington Navy Yard on April 20 for duty in connection with the training of the Washington battalion in preparation for the annual destroyer cruise, will place special emphasis on that sort of the training which can only be secured aboard a regular ship of the line. The divisions of the battalion will drill individually aboard the Leary on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. The deck platoons will be given drills in the lowering and hoisting of small boats, instruction in the handling of small boats, particularly in coming alongside a dock or ship, while the engineers will hold drills in the engine and boiler rooms of the destroyer, using the actual equipment.

The Washington Chapter of the United States Naval Reserve Officers Association is showing a distinct gain in membership, according to reports from the local officers. A meeting of the chapter is being planned after the annual inspection of the Washington battalion. The association has recently been engaged in promoting the interests of the Washington battalion in their project to the securing of new armory.

New Model Basin May Be Built in Nearby Maryland

U. S. Navy Photo.

The impressive-looking establishment shown above is an artist's conception of the Navy's proposed ship model basin. Legislation now being considered on Capitol Hill would provide money to build the basin at a cost of $3,500,000 at Cabin John, Md. The basin would be used to solve naval design problems by studying the behavior of model floats as they are towed through the water at various speeds. Construction of the basin has been strongly urged by Rear Admiral E. S. Land, chief constructor of the Navy.

Airplane Seismograph Traces Centers of Engine Vibration

Instrument Picks Up Shocks From One or Several Parts of Motor, Simultaneously, and Records Them at Station on the Ship.

By Howard W. Blakeslee.

(Associated Press Science Editor.)

Cambridge, Mass., April 4.—A new seismograph for airplanes, to record engine vibrations, was announced today at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

These seismic shocks of flying have been one of the most baffling problems of aviation. Their waves could be felt throughout a plane, but their "epicenters," the point in the machine that made them, could not, as a rule, be located.

With the increase in power and speed the flying shocks have risen to the point where they often cause rapid weakening and breakage of parts. Discovering the "epicenters" has proven essential in getting rid of the danger.

The flying seismograph will pick up the shocks from one or several different parts of the engine, simultaneously, and record them all at the same receiving station, which can be set at any convenient point in the ship.

The new instruments were developed jointly by the institute and the Bureau of Aeronautics of the United States Navy. They are described in a report by Prof. C. S. Draper and G. P. Bentley. Supervising the work are Commander R. D. Wyerbacher, United States Navy, and Dr. J. C. Hunsaker, of the institute. Advising, are Professors C. F. and E. S. Taylor, of the institute.

A very small, new-type seismograph is bolted to the part of the engine, or plane, suspected as the source of danger. Within the housing so fixed is a magnet, free to move to and fro with the vibration. A coil of wire is placed in the intense magnetic field so that every move induces an electrical current which is picked up and transmitted to the central recording station.

There it moves a beam of light recording the vibration photographically in visible waves, by fractions of seconds, and with heights proportional to the force of the vibration.

Even a moving part, like a crankshaft, presents no difficulty for the new instrument.

The seismograph already has enabled engineers to stop the vibration that has broken crankshafts and caused propellers to snap off in the air.

Its use for the first time enables engineers to study a plane's vibration electrically while in flight, instead of through use of laboratory models.

Representative Bacon Assails U. S. Bureau of Air Commerce

By the Associated Press.

The Bureau of Air Commerce was labeled in the House last Wednesday by Representative Bacon (Republican), of New York, as having been "overwhelmed recently by politics, bureaucracy and the inescapable incompetency which flows from rapacious patronage."

He spoke as ranking member of the Appropriations sub-committee in charge of appropriations for the Commerce Department in the $114,467,400 four-department supply bill taken up by the House.

The measure, which would allow additional funds for extending airways equiped with radio and other facilities and for controlling air traffic at main airports, also would provide 1937 fiscal year operating money for the State, Justice and Labor departmenst.

Bacon quoted from a report by J. A. Mount, superintendent of maintenance in the bureau at the time of the Cutting crash, that "the accident was the direct result of improper functioning of aids to air navigation installed and maintained by the Department of Commerce."

"I am informed that since the Cutting crash the Bureau of Air Commerce has improved conditions at Kirksville materially," Bacon said. "Also, however, it has rooted out of the Government, after some 15 years of continuous service in the aeronautics branches, the man whose duty it was to report, and who did report, these conditions prior to the accident."

Chairman McMillan (Democrat), South Carolina, of the sub-committee replied to Bacon that "there was a great deal of trouble before the Democrats ever got in control, so I don't think it fair to charge the Democrats with the conditions."

Politics Alleged.

"The evidence before your committee is clear," Bacon charged, "that in the last few weeks all pretense of merit appointments in the Bureau of Air Commerce personnel has been cast overboard. Today, no matter how poorly qualified or how well qualified the applicant may be, the only questions asked, 'is he a New Dealer?' * * * Today political considerations and Democratic indorsements seem to be more important than training or ability. * * * And yet, the safety of life in the air may depend upon the technical efficiency of this force."

He said that J. C. Cone, assistant director of the bureau, and R. W. Schroeder, chief of Airline Inspection Service, would appoint all inspectors on merit, but "they are handicapped by politics, departmental red tape, departmental jealousies and executive interference from above."

McMillan defended J. M. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in charge of the bureau, as one who, while new to the work, "may be relied upon to remedy any defects."

Cruiser Alton Placed on Sale

Navy Requests Sealed Bids for Former U.S.S. Chicago Now at Hawaii.

The Navy Department announced last week that sealed bids for the sale of the obsolete cruiser Alton, the former U. S. S. Chicago, will be opened in the Navy Department on April 30. The Alton is out of commission at the Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, T. H., where for years she served as a barracks for enlisted men of the submarine base.

Terms of sale of the Alton provide that the vessel or materials from the vessel will be sold only to a citizen of the United States.

Also, that in accordance with a policy installed by the Secretary of the Navy, the vessel must be finally scrapped or sunk by December 31, 1936, as it is subject to the terms of the London Naval Treaty of 1930.

The Alton, as the Chicago, was the first vessel of the "New Navy." She was authorized by Act of Congresses of 1883, and, built according to then radical designs of hull and machinery, she was launched in 1885 at John Roach & Sons Shipyard, Chester, Pa.

California Youth Claims 'Chute Title

Bails Out of Airplane 21 Times in Single Day.

Los Angeles, April 4 (AP).—Herbert Stark recently put in a busy day jumping from airplanes. The 23-year-old Compton, Calif., youth took to his parachute from a plane at 2,000 feet at 6:50 a. m. and from then until 4 o'clock bailed out 21 times.

Stark said he was filing application for the world's record, which he said was held by Troy Colback, of Long Beach, who made 15 successive jumps.

Colback witnessed Stark's jumps and said he would attempt to better Stark's performance Easter Sunday.

Washington Players Capture Five Championship Trophies and Look to Philadelphia

Tourney There in May Offers More Opportunity

Old Dominion Turn-Out Highly Successful; Whist Club Team and Pennebakers Win Maryland Prizes.

By Marian H. Barre.

Washington bridge players have won five championships in the last ten weeks—and that's some record.

In the Old Dominion tournament, in Alexandria last week-end, the Stidham-Brooks pair captured the pair trophy and the Washington Whist Club foursome successfully defended their championship, won last year in Richmond.

At the Maryland State tournament, the Whist Club team, Connolly, Gerber, Thurtell and McIntyre, defeated Jacoby in the team-of-four event, and the Pennebakers won the mixed pairs. Mrs. M. R. West and Mrs. Betty Kelsey came home from Harrisburg with the Shank and Title trophy for pair championship in the central Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia is planning a tournament early in May. Maybe Washington can acquire some more trophies. It's wise to work the winning streak.

The Old Dominion turnout was highly successful. There were 48 pairs entered, players came from at least ten States. Fourteen teams were listed in the team-of-four event. A. P. Stockvis directed, assisted by Lieut. Comdr. W. A. Corley, while R. E. Needham represented the American Bridge League.

Top in First Section.

In both the pair and team play, the victors had top score in the first session. Benton Brooks and Alfred Stidham entered the finals of the pair contest with the maximum carry-over, 20 points. The runners-up, Witner Carey and John Brumbach, of Atlanta, were in that position at the end of the qualifying round. They finished with 117½ match points, only ½ point below the champions. Many fine pairs were entered in this event. Brooks and Stidham had no duplicate experience except in local matches. They are a modst pair of champions who say they "were lucky."

The team consisting of W. M. McIntyre, A. P. Stockvis, Dr. E. B. Connolly and H. L. Shepard is a seasoned foursome not likely to break under the strain of tournament play. They were expected to retain the championship. The Maryland Bridge League team, H. S. Karp, J. C. Kunkel, Dr. L. W. Lord, A. J. Hunter and Mrs. L. W. Lord, came up from third place at the close of the first round to threaten the champions. Here, also, the contest was close—42½ boards for the winners, 40 for the runners-up.

In the consolation section of the pair contest, W. G. Gardner and L. L. Niebrach were high North-South, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Buckley the runners-up In the East-West position, Mrs. H. R. Wagar and Fred Levy, top, with Col. Clifford and Joseph Granger, second.

Washington players constituted three-fourths of the attendance. Among the visitors who have not been mentioned were such fine pairs as Mrs. J. D. Cairns and Mrs. Allan Rutherford, of Baltimore; Dr. R. H. Ecker and Hilton Vernoff, of New York; Jeff Glick, Dr. Arthur Salaska, Mrs. Spotswood Grant, Mr. and Mrs. John Chappell, Mrs. S. L. Davis, Joe Frye and M. J. Glick. The Pennsylvania delegation, that included Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Krieder, F. E. Bentley and H. M. Byrnes. Max Matz, B. J. Wagner, Max Turk and Harry Kammer, from Bluefield, W. Va., and many others.

District of Columbia winners in the World Bridge Olympic, sponsored by Ely Culbertson, are Robert Morris and Col. Frank Bloom, North-South and Roscoe and John Alexander, East-West.

The international championships went out of the United States. Four British players tied for the North-South title, they are R. E. Horner and Alfred Harris, of Ottawa, Canada, and S. Rivlin and Capt. W. H. Ricardo, Cardiff, Wales.

The East-West winners were Dr. Paul S. Stern and Dr. Paul Kaltenegger, of Vienna.

For the United States championships, Arthur N. Cowperthwait, of Tucson, and Ralph A. Cash, of Phoenix, Ariz., won North-South, and George Sherbaum, of Memphis, and L. E. Shields, of Shelby, Tenn., East-West.

Under League Auspices.

The Morris-Bloom pair played under the auspices of the Federal Bridge League, at 2400 Sixteenth street. They are members of a Department of the Interior team which played regularly in the league series. The Alexanders could not be located, unless they played in a private game, they must have competed in the Shoreham contest.

In Baltimore, Allyn Whitehead and Dr. L. W. Lord won North-South, with M. H. Dakais and Harold Karp champions in the East-West. Dr. Lord and Karp played on the Maryland team at Alexandria.

The Olympic was held on February 4 Approximately 200,000 players in all parts of the world compete simultaneously. It requires a huge organization to score the results and nearly two months' time before the championships are announced.

Bridge League Holding Annual Election April 13

Capital City Chess Club Places Cup in Competition for Its Sunday Evening Games; Winners Names Will Be Inscribed.

The Capital City Chess Club has placed a cup in competition for its Sunday evening game. Each night the names of the winners will be inscribed on the trophy. When one player has made five legs, he will be presented with a replica, for his permanent possession. The cup itself will be displayed in the clubrooms at the Hotel Gordon.

Only members and their invited guests are eligible to play at the Chess Club. According to the rules for the competition, each member must play with three different partners. Ladies who are guests of the club are eligible only when they play with members, with the same restriction as to partnership.

The Press Club concluded its regular series last Monday evening. Hereafter four special games will be run on the next four successive Mondays for custody of the club trophies. The mixed-pair contest for the Edwards Trophy is scheduled for next Monday. In the following weeks, the Marvin McIntyre, the Culbertson, and the Victor Smith cups will be put in competition.

Because of the Alexandria tournament the Washington Whist Club canceled its regular duplicate game last Sunday. The club staff was engaged in winning the Old Dominion team-of-four event. Business will be resumed today with the usual round robin, run on alternate Sunday afternoons.

Two new names went on the Nolan Cup last Tuesday, George F. Ashton and J. N. Sourilas. Mr. Sourilas, with Mrs. E. B. Swanson, was runner-up in the first game in the new series.

Miss Frances C. Skelly announces a new series of duplicate games, at No. 206, The Albemarle Apartments, at 8 o'clock each Thursday. The games are intended for players of limited experience.

The annual business meeting of the Washington Bridge League will be held Monday evening, April 13, at 8:30 o'clock at the Shoreham Hotel. Officers to be elected are president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and three members of the executive committee.

The newly elected officers will serve from May 1. The league has no nominating committee and no slate of proposed officers. The choice rests entirely with the members present at the meeting. Proxies are not permitted.

One of the most interesting hands of the Old Dominion Tournament occurred in the qualifying round of the pair contest. It was bid variously to three or four diamonds, once to five diamonds and frequently to three no trump. When Roy Thurtell and Dr. E. B. Connolly played the board they bid it at six diamonds, the only time the slam was attempted.

Mr. Thurtell held the East hand, South opened the club Jack which was won by declarer's ace. His trump lead fell to South's ace, and a diamond was returned. Now it seems that South's king of hearts must be established for the setting trick. Declarer had other plans. After winning five diamond tricks, the ace and king of clubs, and ace of hearts, the four hands were reduced to the following cards:

It was a top on the board for Thurtell and Connolly.

The 47 pairs who failed to win the pair trophy in the Old Dominion Tournament can console themselves that they don't have to shine it. When it was displayed with the other trophies it was sadly in need of polishing.

* * * *

No first-time winners have been reported for many weeks. The veterans were having their day until last Tuesday afternoon, when Mrs. F. R. Neely made her first top score at the Fairfax game. Mrs. C. F. Gross, who made her first top during this season, partnered Mrs. Neely.

This little true story is reminiscent of the famous tale of the poker player who after playing 48 hours became incensed when three of the players, almost fainting from exhaustion, broke up the game to go home to bed. Everyone knows his classic plaint that he "wouldn't have started if he'd known they were going to quit right away!"

Well, bridge players have entered the marathon lists with a vengeance. Recently a foursome began play at a New York club on a Saturday afternoon, and Monday night they were still groggily but determinedly pushing the cards around the table. Another club member approached and signified his intention of cutting in. When the current rubber was over the original four, protesting vehemently against the intrusion, cut cards to determine who was out. The man with the low card rose and staggered to a nearby chair.

"Make it snappy," he said. "I came here to play, not to kibitz!"

Clever Playing Beats Contract

Refusing to Win the First Trick Results in Gaining Two Others Later.

When South bid one spade over East's one diamond and North immediately jumped to four spades with five of that suit, the ace of clubs and a singleton of East's bid, it looked as if he had a certain game. Ordinarily such would have been the case against average defense, but East was better than an average player and by smart and unusual play succeeded in defeating the contract by one trick.

Here was the deal:

North.
S-J-8-7-4-3
H-Q-6-4-2
D-3
C-A-J-7

West.
S-K-9
H-K-9-8-7
D-9-6-2
C-9-5-4-2

East.
S-6
H-A-J-5-3
D-A-J-10-7-5
C-K-Q-10

South.
S-A-Q-10-5-2
H-10
D-K-Q-8-4
C-8-6-3

West opened the nine of diamonds, the highest card of her partner's suit. East could immediately read that South held the king and queen and one or two others of that suit. She reasoned very shrewdly that if she won the first trick with her ace that South, after drawing trumps, could discard his two losing clubs in dummy on the good king and queen of diamonds and thus win the game with four odd, even if her partner, West, held a trick in the trump suit.

Therefore, East deliberately surrendered her only chance to make a diamond trick realizing that instead she would win two club tricks which with her ace of hearts and the possibility of West holding one trump trick would set the hand.

If West did not have a trump trick the game was lost anyway, even if East won with the ace of diamonds. It was a display of good judgment and was rewarded. East and West made one trick in spades, one in hearts and two in clubs and set the contract.

When this hand was played at the Shoreham Mrs. Betty Kelsey at East and, playing with Mrs. Martin R. West, defeated the four-spade contract by the play described.

Three-Cent Rhode Island Commemoratives Will Be Issued May 4 at Providence

Department Prepares Designs Also for Arkansas and Oregon

Third International Philatelic Exhibition Set for May 9 to May 17 in New York Will Include Large Exhibit From Postoffice.

The new three-cent commemorative stamp honoring the 300th anniversary of the settlement of Rhode Island will be issued first-day at Providence, R. I., on May 4. Design of this samp has already been made public.

The Postoffice Department is also preparing designs for the Arkansas and Oregon commemorative stamps. Nothing has been made public up to this time regarding designs or first-day arrangements except to suggest two cities in the old Oregon Territory. However, there are being made requests for other places for Oregon.

The third International Philatelic Exhibition will be held in New York City, May 9 to May 17. The Postoffice Department will have a large exhibit there as well as a branch philatelic agency. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will also have a display.

The association in charge of the exhibit has requested the department to issue a souvenir sheet for the affair and this request will be granted. No details have been made public yet but the sheet will contain four commemorative sheets of recent issue. There are many suggestions being considered as to just what stamps will be used and an early announcement is expected.

The question where the souvenir sheets may be purchased is also being considered. It is reasonably sure that the sheets will be offered for sale in the exhibition and as this is a paid admission affair it is expected that the sheets will be offered for sale at postoffices in New York City. Just what arrangement will be sanctioned by the Postoffice Department in this regard has not yet been made public.

Philatelic Notes

The Department of Commerce Stamp Club will meet tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock at Room 6225, Commerce Building.

A recent visitor at the Philatelic Agency was Kyoichi Suzuki, secretary of the Department of Communications of Japan. He was entertained by Superintendent R. E. Fellers and made a thorough study of the agency as Japan is to establish a like bureau.

The year book issued for 1935-1936 by the Society of Philatelic Americans, compiled by the secretary, Col. Frank L. Coes, of Worcester, Mass., is being distributed to members.

The second annual exhibition of the Chicago Women's Stamp Club will be held in the Tower Building, Chicago, May 23 and May 24. An attractive souvenir label has been issued and can be secured from the secretary, Mrs. A. C. Westphal, 3008 North Whipple street, Chicago. This organization was formed in May, 1930, and was the first woman's stamp club in the country.

The grand award, the Gov. Harold G. Hoffman Trophy, went to the Union County Philatelic Society, Elizabeth, N. J., at the fourth annual "Atex 1936" show of the Atlantic City Stamp Club at Colton Manor, March 20 to 22.

Reports from London are to the effect that the enforcement of sanctions will prevent the distribution of the new issues of Italy and colonies. Foreign periodicals and newspapers are not allowed to enter Italy. Since 1929 Italy and colonies have issued upwards of 1100 stamps.

Interesting Story Told of Stamp Error

English Jubilee Samples Are Printed on Wrong Paper.

There is an interesting story being told in London concerning the error in the color of the 2½-pence silver jubilee stamp, the Russian blue. C. H. Vaughan, secretary of the Washington Philatelic Society, has one of these rareties.

The official color of the stamp is bright ultramarine. Prior to the selection of the official color a number of imperforate sheets were submitted by the printers in a variety of blue shades, several being Prussian blue.

The postal authorities intended to place all of these trial sheets in the archives but through a mistake three of the four sheets in Prussian blue were returned to the printers, together with the sample approved, and were perforated, gummed and finally turned up in the usual manner at a branch postoffice in London.

It is stated that more than 300 of the 360 possible copies have been found in the market, the price being decidedly high for a 2½-pence stamp. One New York dealer quotes a price of $190 for a single stamp.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

In a British philatelic magazine a writer replying to the query, "Don't you think that the Georgians are a good investment?" says: "This unhealthy phase of speculation is a recurring handicap to the hobby. When the speculator makes a heavy loss, he often loses interest; even worse, he becomes a bad advertisement and puts others off the path of enjoying the pleasures of stamp collecting."

The stamp market in the United States may be compared to the situation existing in British circles. New stamps, soon to be issued, also the present varieties—the Georgians—are a factor in the market. British investors, like many of our own people, are buying in great quantities. For a long time the sale of current values have been at record figures.

Dealers who make large purchases sell at a great profit. The number of stamp collectors is steadily on the increase, consequently advanced prices are easily absorbed. In spite of the fact that many dealers have invested large sums in United States stamps it seems highly improbable that a high price could be applied to any particular stamp.

The collector may buy stamps of his own country as they are issued, not depending upon any single dealer to supply his current wants. If the variety field is sought an entirely new situation is opened and must be dealt with accordingly.

The stamp speculator looks for greater gain because of the increase in collectors. The British speculator, like his American friend, buys, not as a collector or a dealer, but simply as a trader. At best there are too many stamp collectors, as well as dealers.

Stamp collectors have no reason to fear speculators as long as the ever-increasing number of collectors engages in the hobby simply for the pleasure of it.

Inflation prices have no place in the stamp market and just as long as collectors are content to buy at prices of their own making the speculator has no secure foothold.

Great Seal Stamp.

The great seal of the United States, the central design of the new 16-cent bicolored air-mail special delivery stamp, has been re-engraved, showing a smaller vignette than was on the blue variety.

British Forces Using New Stamp in Egypt

The 1-piastre Egyptian military stamp used by the British forces in Egypt was discontinued on March 1 and demonetized as of March 15. A new stamp, 1-piastre value, with the likeness of King Fuad and inscribed "Army Post," has been issued, to be used only on soldier mail to the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Exhibition Dates Set.

The Washington Federation of Stamp Collectors will hold an exhibition April 13 to April 18. There will be two classes and five groups. Awards will be made and the best exhibits will be shown in the National junior exhibit in New York City in May.

100 Lots of Stamps Auctioned At Meeting of Collectors Club

Another Auction Announced for April 14 With Many Offerings of Unusual Value; Exhibition Likely to Precede Sale.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., held a largely attended meeting at the Thomson School on Tuesday evening, President F. A. Bickert, presiding. Considerable business of a routine nature was transacted.

The feature of the meeting was the auction sale, upwards of 100 lots of United States and foreign stamps being sold, Mr. Bickert acting as auctioneer. It was announced that on April 14 another auction will be held when many lots of unusual value will be sold. It is expected that the lots will be exhibited prior to the sale.

Two unusual exhibitions were displayed during the evening. R. E. Smith showed his large and interesting collection of United States postal cards. Of late many collectors have taken renewed interest in postal cards and the demand for these many varieties is larger than for some years. James F. Duhamel also displayed a part of his postal card collection.

Seven new members were admitted to membership as follows: Albert E. Hardman, George J. Heid, Clyde DeBinder, Barton P. Root, Lucille M. Harris, Joseph C. Manian and Daniel H. Reichgent. Three applications were received.

Svend Yort was present with the club's collection of counterfeit stamps. It is the policy of the club to rid all collections of counterfeits and by placing them in the club collection these bogus copies can be used for comparison. The stamps are arranged by countries and this asset is of real value to the membership.

There will be another meeting Tuesday at the Thomson school, the public being invited. An interesting program will be given and the usual exhibit held.

A chapter of the National Plate Block Society was organized at a preliminary meeting Tuesday evening at the home of W. E. Dettweiler, 3545 Quesada street northwest.

Meetings will be held the fourth Mondays of each month. Officers will be elected at the next session. Present at the first meeting were Messrs. F. R. Rice, Petrie, Hayes, Morgan, Seltzer, Johnston, Ed Kee, David, Morgan and Dettweiler.

The monthly auction sale was held at the meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society at the Carlton Hotel Wednesday evening. There was a large attendance. J. H. Jenkins officiated as auctioneer and a large number of lots of United States and foreign stamps were disposed of.

Two questions from the National Federation of Stamp Clubs were submitted and strongly opposed, that for a national committee for stamp approval and that the United States issue semi-postal stamps.

At the meeting on Wednesday there will be an exhibition of various methods of mounting and writing up collections.

Jacques Creed, of Philadelphia, will be at Hotel Lafayette tomorrow and Tuesday and will be pleased to receive his Washington friends.

The first of 10 or 12 demonstration voyages of the new airship "Hindenburg" between Germany and the United States has been announced for May 6 from Frankfurt, Germany, to arrive in Lakehurst, N. J., May 9 and to start on the return trip from Lakehurst May 9. Two new German Zeppelin stamps, showing the airship "Hindenburg" in the flight over the ocean, in values of 50 pfg. and 75 pfg. will be used. The United States will not issue a special stamp for these flights.

The fifth edition of the "Handbook on Precanceled Stamps" has been issued by Adolf Gunesch, of Chicago. It contains much information and is fully illustrated.

Chicago dealers and collectors have established a postage stamp bourse open Sundays from 2 to 10 p. m., and Thursdays from 7:30 to 11 p. m., at 167 West Washington street under the direction of G. W. Conrad.

'Cinderella Luck' Gives Crippled Singer Career

Grace Vitality Hopeful Of Appearing in Opera

Chance Broadcast Surprises Announcer, Places Girl on Radio and Offers Opportunity to Meet Grace Moore, Her Film Idol.

By a Cinderella twist of fortune Grace Vitality is now headed toward musical fame.

The 16-year-old Washington, D. C., singer got her chance on the radio. Herself a victim of paralysis, Grace was discovered during a publicity broadcast for President Roosevelt's birthday ball.

The announcer was asking various boys and girls who watched the program at the Weightman School for Cripples if they wanted to say something. Grace said she had nothing to say, but she asked to sing. The announcer was surprised and a little doubtful. Then she sang. The rest is history.

Talent Is Natural.

Since she was 5, this Italian-born girl has been singing at her home at 1301 Taylor street northwest. Her family and customers at her father's shoe shop were her audience.

Her talent was entirely natural. She had no musical instruction until recently. Many of her numbers were learned by seeing over and over the movies in which Grace Moore and Nelson Eddy, her favorites, appeared.

"I'll never forget the day I met Miss Moore," she tells Parade. "She came to Washington and I was able to go to a dinner given for her. I shall always remember the splendor of it."

Happy Despite Crutches.

Happy despite the crutches she once needed, Grace kept singing. Now she only uses a brace. "I am in hopes," she says confidently, "that soon I shall be able to walk without my brace."

The new star plans a career in opera. But she is continuing her popular broadcasts. "I love my work," she adds. "It is thrilling to stand in front of a microphone to sing and think of all the people listening in."

Taken for Ride!

Fred Cass Can Smile Now as He Recalls His Two-Mile 'Swim.'

Swept Through And Under City

Swept 2 miles in a raging stream—part of the way underground, too! Yet 11-year-old Fred Cass lives!

Heavy rains have poured down on Pasadena, Calif. Standing on the edge of one of the city's largest concrete storm drains, Fred watches the swirling water. Suddenly he loses balance, totters, then drops into the current.

On and on he is carried, swept madly through the undercity tunnels of the drain.

One man dives for him, hits his head on the tunnel roof and himself has to be rescued. "He was knocked cold," writes Fred, from 669 Rio Grande street.

"Finally," he continues, "a man named Jerry Peek dragged me out. I had been carried over 2½ miles."

Plays Instrument for Each of Her 16 Years

Lilian Pavey, 16, of Glasgow, Scotland, can play 16 different instruments.

In six years she has learned to play the saxophone, Sousaphone, trumpet, trombone, piccolo, piano-accordion, Hawaiian guitar, banjo, saw, violin, organ, Spanish guitar, bagpipes, violin-cello, mandolin and, recently, the drums.

Ohioan's Keen Aim Fells Cups

Camp Perry Trophies Rest Among Many Won by June Smith.

Shooting to fame in more ways than one is 17-year-old June Smith, only woman member of the Ohio men's rifle team that shoots annually against Michigan.

Besides this distinction, the Youngstown, Ohioan's unerring aim has brought down such game as: A tie for first place on the Mid-West men's team to shoot against Ontario, Canada, 1934; Junior Long Range championship, National Matches, Camp Perry, Ohio, '34 and '35, and Junior Short Range trophy, '35; a place on the American Legion Junior team, national championship aggregation; State Junior Position championship, '34, '35.

"I began shooting with our high school team in 1933," writes June, from Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, where she is now a student. "After winning the school championship I went in for open competition."

June shoots a .22 caliber rifle. She likes swimming, basketball, skating, tumbling and volley ball almost as well as target-shooting.

Homeless at 16, Author Lives Off Typewriter

Will Herman Learned From Experience That a Hobo's Life Was Not for Him; Sale of First Article Made Him Cry, He Says.

Left an orphan at 10, forced to face the world alone at 16, Will Herman has lived off his typewriter. He has sold the astounding total of 1,500 stories and articles!

Now 19, his address is 4283 E. Ninety-fourth street, Cleveland, Ohio. But for some time it was "General Delivery, Almost Anywhere." When he left the orphanage where he lived until 16 he had two real possessions—a suit of clothes and a portable typewriter. But inside him burned ambition.

Jobs were not to be found. So Will decided to travel. "I visited New York, Chicago, Washington and other cities I'd long wanted to see," he says. "Riders and drivers often gave me a lift. More often I hiked."

Typed Anywhere.

He typed letters and accounts for hotel owners in exchange for rent. Restaurant proprietors swapped him meals for typed menus, letters or accounts.

"But," Will emphasizes, "hitch-hiking isn't romantic. It's a hard, dirty life that no boy should attempt. There's no adventure to it. It's just dirt and going hungry and being tired. I decided I would have to do something or else I'd soon find myself just a bum."

Still unable to find a job, he wrote his first story. "I think I prayed it would sell," he recalls. "Meanwhile I wrote others. I would type at the side of the road, go off into fields, or use the hotel room at night."

Tickled Pink.

After he tried several magazines the story sold. "I was so tickled with that $2.25 check that I think I cried!" Will says. "I couldn't help it. That really started me!"

The number of sales increased. Soon Will returned to his home town, able to earn a living by writing.

"It's work, not luck, that wins in this writing game, or anything else," Will explains.

Country Cousins Are Taller, Says Doctor

The average 10-year-old country boy is 2¾ inches taller and 5 pounds heavier than his city cousin, according to Dr. Arthur McNalty, chief medical officer of the board of education, London, England.

Smothers Fire To Save Sister

Fast thinking and fast action by 14-year-old Paul Davis recently saved his sister from burning to death.

The plucky Seattle Boy Scout and 12-year-old Elaine Davis were alone in their home at 1907 Miller street.

"While I was chopping wood in the basement, Elaine came down and lit some papers in the furnace," writes Paul. "Starting back up the stairs, her dress suddenly burst into flames. Evidently a spark had dropped on it and had been fanned to life when she ran upstairs.

"When she cried out, I rushed up the steps and crushed her to my body. Carrying her to the foot of the steps, I found a rug. I wrapped her in it, smothering the flames."

'Not So,' Say the Ponder Twins

It's not true that the Ponder twins part their hair on opposite sides when they're on the outs with each other.

But it is true that they once fooled a teacher at Sunset High School, Dallas, Tex., by parting it on the same side.

Because Thelwyn had failed to memorize the United States Constitution, he had to stay after school. But Thelwyn just had to play baseball that afternoon. So twin Elwyn, who knew the assignment, parted his hair like his brother's, stayed in Thelwyn's place and teacher was none the wiser.

"We're 17, both of us, of course," they write Parade, "both have letters in football and basketball, and both intend to be coaches, Thelwyn of baseball, Elwyn of football. We have the most fun kidding the girls as to which is which."

Pie Baker No. 1 Is Mildred

New York City's Best Girl Scout Pie Baker. That's Mildred Cornell's title. And she had to beat 41 others to win it!

Listen to the judges' description of her pie: "Well done and firm—a crisp, flaky, golden crust—delicious spicy flavor!" Sounds good enough to eat!

"I have been cooking since I was 11 (two years ago)," writes Mildred from 8526 169th street, Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y. "I started with the simpler things.

"My mother gave me my first instructions. Later my school cooking teacher helped me. This contest was the first I had entered. I was extremely excited when I learned I had won."

Mildred's opponents were champion pie bakers from other Girl Scout troops in the city.

Nimble Youth Cheats Train Of a Victim

George Yanks Man Off Track as Engine Whizzes By.

Quick-eyed, quick-thinking George Baisch pulled an aged man, weighing 210 pounds, from the path of an onrushing locomotive.

George, 15, of Green Bay, Wis., was washing the windows of a restaurant at Walnut and Pearl streets, above which he lives. He sighted Mr. Louis Deterville, 89, duck under the lowered gates at the Walnut street crossing, apparently become confused, trip and fall heavily to the tracks.

George Baisch.

"I dropped my brush, towel and wiper. I saw that he was on the same tracks as the approaching engine," writes George. "I rushed to him and pulled him away just as the train passed."

Railroad officials said this undoubtedly saved Mr. Deterville's life, but it left its mark upon the young rescuer. "I was ordered to bed with strained neck and shoulder muscles, which later resulted in a throat infection," he adds.

Parade Reporter Gets Story, Unites Friends

Diligent work by a Parade of Youth reporter has reunited old friends of 25 years ago. Marshall Alexander, of Wilmington, Del., located a family in his home town and sent a complete "story" to an inquiring Virginian.

It all started when Marshall, who lives at 1710 Lancaster avenue, wrote a letter to Parade, which was printed in the Letters Column. Down in Rectortown, Va., it was read by Mr. E. K. Phillips. Seeing the Wilmington address, Mr. Phillips wrote to Marshall asking him if he could locate a family there.

Marshall Alexander.

Marshall began digging through a city directory. His search finally took him to the home of John and Meta Kidwell. They, he learned, were Mr. Phillip's friends. The friends had been parted for 25 years!

So Marshall reported his find. He says, "Mr. Phillips sure was glad to find his friends."

Pet Pigeon Returns to Classroom After Year

"Brighteyes" has gone back to school.

A year ago, Brighteyes, a pigeon, entered school through a window. A storm had forced him to take refuge in the classroom of the fourth grade at Davis Street School in Westville, Conn.

The pupils immediately adopted the bird, named it and cared for it. A month later they heard it belonged to a neighbor and freed it.

A year passed. The other day a pecking was heard on the same classroom window. It was Brighteyes, battered by biting spring winds and ready for a rest in his classroom haven.

The only trained canary in the movies is Buzzie. He is owned by Curley Twiford, sings on command, takes a bath when told to (not just on Saturday nights!) and will come to anyone who calls him. For this talented work Buzzie draws a bird of a salary of $150 a week.

Professor Owns World's Finest Aggregation of Novelty Cats

Prof. John Uri Lloyd, of 3901 Clifton avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio, author and scientist, has perhaps the world's best collection of novelty cats.

He owns 300 toy cats, 100 of which have just been sent to him from Japan by his friend, Hajime Hoshi, the Japanese drug store magnate.

"My collection of cats was started in a most unusual manner," Prof. Lloyd writes. "About ten years ago, after I had repeatedly asked Mrs. Lloyd if we could not have a cat at our home, she walked into my office one day carrying a valise and remarked that she had bought me a cat. It was not a real cat, however—just a plaster one that sleeps now on a white satin cushion in my office. From that day I have been receiving toy cats on Christmas, birthdays and all special occasions.

One of the Lloyd Cat Drawings.

"I have temple cats from China, some very rare and very old. One very crude cat was found in the basement of an old house wrecked in Boston. This cat is made of wood and very likely was carved by a boy or girl.

"Then there are cloth cats and calico cats, sleeping cats and fighting cats. One of my prized possessions is a cat made of a mixture of bronze, silver and gold, with mother-of-pearl eyes. He lies on a beautifully embroidered Japanese cushion. I have a cat about an inch in height made of solid gold. Another is carved of ivory so old that it is yellow with years.

"Among others is a mother cat sewing on a machine while her little kitten is treading the peddle, and fine drawings of a Persian cat, sent to me by a Japanese countess."

John Gardner Declares Famous 'Only Human'

Kings, Queens, Presidents, Governors, Boxers and Fliers Among Group From Whom He Has Received Replies to His Letters.

John Gardner associates with presidents, kings, famous aviators and other celebrities through the mail! John, who lives at 34 Albany avenue, Green Island, N. Y., has sent letters of congratulation and condolence to many of the world's great and near-great. And what's more, he gets answers!

"I started my hobby," he writes Parade, "when former President Hoover was elected. I sent him a letter of congratulation. It wasn't long before I received a reply from his home in Palo Alto, Calif.

King and Queen Reply.

"Since then I have corresponded with Col. Lindbergh, Benito Mussolini, Marshal Pilsudski, Polish dictator; President Quezon of Mexico, Aviatrix Amelia Earhart, Auto Magnate Henry Ford, Boxer Max Baer and others.

"My letters of sympathy to Queen Mary of England and King Leopold and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium concerning the deaths in the royal families were graciously acknowledged by their Majesties."

John Gardner.

A student at Heatly High School, John finds that "big shots" are just human and appreciate expression of congratulations and sympathy just as much as any other person. For example, the Governors of 40 States have sent their 18-year-old correspondent autographs. Gov. Talmadge even invited him to visit Georgia!

Prizes From Presidents.

"But my most prized possessions," writes John, "are an autographed photograph President Roosevelt sent me while he was Governor of New York, and a book from Mr. Hoover. I have had several other letters and cards from both of these men."

TWO thousand, five hundred dollars a week! That was the salary paid film-star Jane Withers for personal appearances at a Chicago theater.

Bonita Granville Refused to Become a Carbon Copy of Others.

Original Acting Wins Contract

Bonita Rejects Advice to Ape Shirley Temple in Movies.

Because 12-year-old Bonita Granville insisted on being herself rather than a carbon copy of Shirley Temple, she now has a long-term contract with United Artists. Her first starring production is to be "These Three."

Daughter of Bernard (Bunny) Granville, stage and screen actor, Bonita went to Hollywood with her parents four years ago. Later, when she thought of becoming an actress, friends advised her to become a second Shirley Temple. She must learn tap dancing, singing, and curl her hair, they said.

Instead, Bonita set out to be as different as possible. Soon her method showed results. She played small parts in "Westward Passage," "The Life of Virgie Winters," "Ah Wilderness" and other pictures.

"Ah Wilderness" brought her to the attention of casting directors and to a long-term contract.

Bonita, who lives at 650 Franklin avenue, Hollywood, Calif., is a senior in junior high school.

Strays Come Home as Mother Goose Advised

The old Mother Goose method of handling stray sheep applies to stray mules, also, it would seem from a recent occurrence in Scranton, Pa.

"Leave them alone and they'll come home, dragging their tails behind them," quoted an official of a coal company, when notified by an amateur "Buffalo Bill" that he was organizing a crowd to round up the 12 mules who had wandered from the company's yard.

Sure enough, the mules came home after reaching territory unfamiliar to them, dragging their tails behind them—as predicted, and expected.

Shirley Temple Poses With Doll Model of a Japanese Bride.

Actress Owner Of Largest Doll

The largest doll in the world belongs to Shirley Temple. Taller than an ordinary man, it was presented to her by Japanese youngsters in the Hawaiian Islands.

An exact reproduction of a Japanese bride, the doll is richly costumed in a native gown said to be hundreds of years old. The ornaments consist of an antique fan, beaten silver trinkets and earrings. The doll's porcelain head is crowned with genuine hair.

The body of the doll is carved out of wood. Its arms, legs, feet and head are movable.

The Taxpayer Pays And Pays; So Does 11-Year Pete Weeks

The youngest taxpayer in Polk County, Fla., and perhaps the youngest anywhere, is 11-year-old Pete Weeks.

Wearing the cattleman's traditional "ten-gallon hat," Pete strode into the office of Tax Collector Paul M. Henderson not long ago and plunked down State and county taxes on the cattle he owns and raises on his father's farm near Bartow.

Pete Weeks.

"I now own 50 head of stock," says Pete, "and have my own mark and brand. I look after my cattle myself. keep an accurate account of all expenses and all increases and decreases in my stock. I also own two nice ponies."

Pete's smart in school (at 11, he's in the ninth grade) and otherwise, too. "My whole aim when I finish my education and become a man," he adds, "is to be an intelligent cattleman and farmer."

Familiar '.22' Starts Youth In GunHobby

Jobs in Blacksmith and Harness Shops Pay for Purchases.

John Warren Sanders, jr., knows guns—lock, stock and barrel. Already considered an expert, he hopes some day to become the world's greatest authority on arms.

At his home at 312 Kimbrough avenue, Springfield, Mo., John has a collection of hundreds of bullets, guns, pistols and other weapons. His library contains every technical book and magazine on the subject within his means. He can tell the make, model and caliber of many guns just by seeing their pictures.

When John was 9—six years ago —his father took him on a hunting trip. His gun was the familiar "22." That gun started John on his hobby.

A year later he got hold of an old catalogue filled with descriptions of guns of many types. Deeply interested, he began gathering his library. He wrote to gun manufacturers and sport stores for catalogues and folders, and got books.

Most of his collection is of historic value. In it is a flintlock pistol used in the War of 1812.

It took money to get his books and guns. John earned it himself. He writes Parade: "I worked in a blacksmith shop two years ago and in a harness shop last summer.

"When I finish school I hope to get a job designing guns in a firearms factory. I hope some day to know more about guns and shooting than anyone else."

Writes and Stages 3-Act Production

This girl said she was going to write a play, and she did. What's more, the play was produced at the Pemberton, (N. J.), Grammar School. The playwright is Alda Vera Loveland, 12.

Alda Loveland.

"This is the first play I ever wrote," says Alda. "It is called 'Betty and Billy's New Home' and has three acts. Mary Jane Yerkes, a classmate, helped me direct it but no one helped with the writing."

Alda, an accomplished pianist, also hopes to write music some day.

John Sanders and a Few of His Historic Firearms.

The Story of Guns

By John Warren Sanders, Jr.

The first guns, really small cannon, were made about 700 years ago. The bullets were small arrows, padded to fit the gun barrel. Soon hand guns became popular. These were small, muzzle-loading affairs, with short barrels.

Later similar guns were made with a stock which could be rested on the chest. It was not until years later that gun stocks were made to be rested against the shoulder. All early guns were fired by lighting powder with a match.

By 1400 guns were made with triggers which fired the match About that time some unknown genius invented gun rifling. It had long been known that spinning a missile would increase its accuracy. Now this principle was applied to guns.

There was a drawback to this system, however. The bullets of these early rifled guns had to be forced down the barrel. After the gun had been fired a few times, the barrel was so fouled by powder it was hard to force the bullet through. Better powder partially eliminated this fault later.

Few Early Rifles.

Very few of the early guns were rifles. The majority were smoothbore (unrifled) muskets and blunderbusses. They were cheaper and easier to load. The blunderbuss was a gun with a funnel-shaped muzzle. This peculiar muzzle scattered the shot.

Then came the wheellock, a complicated gun which was fired by flint instead of a match. These guns were very expensive and resulted in the invention of the flintlock. The latter was fired by a mechanism which rubbed a flint against steel. The spark fell in a "pan" containing fine-grained powder, which in turn fired the main powder charge.

Improvement Rapid.

About 100 years ago percussion lock guns were common. They were fired by a small cap which was exploded by the hammer.

From then on rifles improved very quickly. By the time of the Civil War most guns were breech-loaders. that is, they were loaded from the breech, or lower end. By 1890 many repeaters were in use. Modern guns which can fire hundreds of shots per minute can scarcely be compared with the old matchlock.

Dairy Cattle Judging Wins English Trip

United States Champs to Compete Against British Team.

A thorough knowledge of the fine points of live stock judging won Vincent Kelly, 17, of Washburn, Iowa, a trip to England.

Vincent is the youngest member of the Black Hawk County (Iowa) dairy cattle judging team which holds both State and National 4-H Club championships.

With Clinton Sage, 20, and Kenneth Kramer, 20, both of Waterloo, Iowa, he was chosen to carry the Stars and Stripes into competition against Britain's best cattle judges this July at Bristol, England.

"I have been in 4-H Club work the past six years," writes Vincent. "During that time I have shown about 15 firsts and several seconds at our club fairs."

Two years ago Vincent made the judging team, of which he has been high man ever since. "The team won at the Northeast Iowa Fair in Mason City, and at the Dairy Cattle Congress in Waterloo," he says, "but it was our victory in the National Dairy Show at St. Louis that gave us most joy. That meant a trip to England!"

The young judging champion is now a hard-working freshman at Iowa State College.

Sad, Sad Tale of One Big Bad Wolf

This wolf didn't go to anybody's door, but so many people came to his that he had to move.

Visitors to the Central Park Zoo in New York City were surprised one day to find the cage marked "Timber Wolf" empty.

The reason was this: After Walt Disney's animated cartoon, "The Three Little Pigs," had been shown in New York City hundreds of people thronged about the wolf's cage to make fun of him.

Outside the cage they jabbered and jumped up and down. Then, pointing at him, they would sing. "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?"

After a few weeks, the poor animal became so nervous and ill-tempered that his keeper finally moved him to a secluded cage at the far end of the park.

Now that the tumult and the shouting is over, the keeper has moved the wolf back to his former cage, where he lives a peaceful and comparatively monotonous life.

Future Farmer Builds Auto Trailer

Gaylon Bell's Auto-House in the Making, Top, and the Finished Trailer Ready to Go Places.

There's a long, long automobile house trailer a-winding along the curving roads of Michigan—a trailer built by a Middleville high school senior.

Gaylon Bell, the builder, did the job on $261 so that he and his family could take outings in the countryside these nice spring days at a minimum of expense.

Trailer Is Fully Equipped.

The trailer has filled the bill. It is fully equipped with refrigerator, sink, lights, beds and everything that makes automobile travel a success.

Gaylon undertook the project in connection with his Future Farmer work at the Thornapple-W. K. Kellogg High School.

The wheels, axle and frame came from junked automobiles. The lumber was planed at a local furniture factory. The plans were drawn by Gaylon and his father after study of a number of commercial plans.

Value Estimated at $377.

Writes Gaylon: "The value of the trailer is estimated at $377, the cost of production at $261, and my profit at $116.

"With my experience on the project I have been able to get a number of odd carpentry jobs."

Around the World in News, Scie

Food and Pearls.

1 An oyster filters a barrel of water through its body daily to obtain food and oxygen, Dr. T. C. Nelson, of Rutgers University, told a group of scientists recently in describing his experiments with the creatures.

Oysters have no eyes, no nose, no ears. Female oysters lay about 60,000,000 eggs each summer. As soon as the young oyster hatches, it swims about in the sea until its shell begins to form. Then it sinks to the bottom and attaches itself to a rock, remaining there the rest of its life. It eats tiny plant organisms.

Only one out of a million oysters grows up. The rest are eaten by fish, starfish and snails. Happily so! For the offspring of a single oyster would form a pile of shells twice as big as the earth in four generations!

The oyster industry is the most valuable of all fisheries. First, for food. Secondly, for pearls.

When a grain of sand gets inside an oyster, it is covered with layer after layer of a milky fluid. This hardens into a pearl. The best pearls are produced by the pearl oyster, found in the Far East. For this work, divers search the bottom for the oysters. Only about one shell in a thousand contains a pearl. The diver is constantly armed with a knife to protect himself from man-eating sharks.

Signs, Signs, Signs.

2 The grimly steady increase in automobile accidents affords an interesting test. How observing is the average driver? Ask dad or mother, for example, to tell how many different kinds of road signs they see when driving.

They'll mention immediately the familiar traffic signal with its "Stop," "Go," and amber "Caution," but find out if they can call off a dozen others. Here are far more than a dozen—

"Slow, Slippery when Wet; Sharp Curve, Curve, Winding Road, R. R. Crossing, School, Slow Down; Steep Grade, Trucks Descend in Second Gear, Cross Road, 20 Mile Limit, Hospital, No Noise; Side Road, Arterial Highway or Through Highway, Keep to Right, No Passing on Hill, No U Turn, 45 Mile Limit, Soft Shoulders; Slow Down and See Our Town, Speed Up and See Our Jail! Danger, Children; Traffic Lights Ahead and, last but not least, No Parking!"

Cinnabar.

3 Surveying between Nome and Ilianma, Alaska, 35 years ago, E. W. Parks uncovered a promising cinnabar vein. While thousands of others scrambled for Alaska's gold, Parks retained his interest in the less precious metal. Through the years he has mined enough to make a modest living. Now he plans a trip to the United States, his first in many years, to interest others in the mineral.

Mercury, or quicksilver, is refined from cinnabar ore. The ore is also called vermilion and mercury blende.

It is usually found as a brilliant scarlet powder in slate, shale or sandstone, and may be seen in process of formation at hot springs in California and Nevada. Most of the cinnabar now used in the United States is imported from Europe, but both California and Texas have important commercial deposits.

Age-Old Game

4 It's a far cry from baseball to chess. But Dr. Max Euwe, new world's chess champion, trains for an important match just as rigorously as a diamond star for the season's opening game.

It has been found that physical fitness is an important factor in championship chess play. Luck plays no part in the game. The outcome depends entirely upon skill.

Over the centuries chess has steadily increased in favor. Long before Christ, the game was played in India, Egypt and China. Over 1,200 years ago, it was brought to Europe from Persia.

It is from the Persian word "shah," meaning king, that we derived the word chess. The principal piece used in the game is the king. The chess term, "checkmate," undoubtedly came from the Persian, "shah mat," meaning "the king is dead."

Each age has made its contribution to the game. The absolute sovereignty of ancient rulers is reflected in the importance of the king on the board. The rise of the church contributed the bishops; and feudal days, the knights and castles.

All-'Round Bean.

5 The soybean, one of man's most ancient and important foods, is fast gaining acreage in the south on land taken out of production in the Federal Government's cotton reduction program.

Native to China and Japan where it has grown since remote times the soybean is a newcomer in the United States. But it has already proved itself the most versatile crop that can be grown.

Half the United States crop is used to make flour, soy sauce, infant foods, breakfast food, lard and butter substitutes, candies, nut-substitutes, health drinks, paint, varnish, glue, printing inks, oil cloth, linoleum, rubber substitutes, glycerin, insect poisons and livestock food. The rest is used as forage for cattle, or plowed under to enrich the soil.

Dog-Power.

6 A dog-power vehicle now popular in Belgium is the latest in cheap transportation. Nicknamed "the poor man's taxi," it resembles a motorcycle sidecar. A husky dog harnessed between the shafts pushes it from the rear.

For years dogs have hauled burdens in that country. To get milk to town, farmers rig up small two-wheeled carts for their dogs. This is also common in the Netherlands and France.

Dog-power is still common in the Arctic, despite the increasing popularity of engines. Sled huskies are a familiar sight there. Similar in appearance was the dog used by roving bands of American Indians before Spaniards introduced the horse. These tribes placed their belongings on a wheelless vehicle mounted on two long poles. These "travois" were dragged by dogs.

In the timber districts of Japan even heavier tasks have fallen to dogs. There they are harnessed to loads of logs and help haul them out of the forests. In other parts of the world dogs walk treadmills to churn milk, draw water from wells and do other wearisome jobs.

What new burden will man lay on the capable shoulders of his most loyal servant?

Rogue Elephants.

7 A rogue elephant nearly killed a South African hunter in the Limpopo River not long ago, but when one meets a rogue it's a case of his life or yours, and the hunter triumphed.

Rogue elephants are the chief public enemies of the animal kingdom. Generally, they are old males which, because of surly tempers and downright meanness, are driven out of the herds.

Loneliness leads to madness and despair. They attack anything in their paths with indescribable fury. Murder seems to be the only motive of their lives.

Even circuses and zoos have had rogue elephants. After years of captivity and good nature, an old male will suddenly go on a rampage. He will attack his keeper, roar with fury, smash to kindling any wood in sight, and try to wrest himself free from his chains.

A bullet is the only thing that will stop him.

And thus it was with the wild rogue in South Africa. The hunter, attacked by the maddened beast, sought safety in the river.

Waist deep in water, he turned to see the giant bull splashing toward him.

The hunter then unslung his rifle, but it took three shots to bring down the old rogue.

Farmwoman's Friend.

8 Next month the "farmwoman's best friend" will take a "taxi driver's vacation." She will lay aside her duties as advisor to some 2,000,000 rural American women and devote herself to the problems of farmwomen the world over.

Miss Grace E. Frysinger will chairman the third triennial conference of the Associated Country Women of the World. Women from 30 countries will discuss common problems in an effort to arrive at an international understanding of farm life.

Though middle-aged, Miss Frysinger is young and brisk in manner. She knows the farm. She was born on an Illinois farm, and spent years in study of agricultural problems.

For 18 years she has been helping country women. She began during the World War, when the Department of Agriculture asked her to instruct Midwest farm women in preserving food.

After a tour through her territory she gave a glowing account of farm women's co-operation and eagerness to learn. The Department then formed a new branch to aid farm women. Miss Frysinger was made supervisor of one of the most important farming regions in the country, the "bread basket of America"—the Middle West.

That's been her job ever since. To most people that would be some job. But to Miss Frysinger it's fun. When she's not on a speaking tour she works at home from 5 until 7 o'clock, eats breakfast, is at her office at 9.

She loves her work. She shows it when she talks of "my farm women." She's intense; her eyes sparkle. She speaks emphatically, punctuating her words with expressive sweeps of her hands.

She's sincere in her admiration of country women. Her modesty proves that. In 1927 she was the only United States woman delegate to the first conference on rural life, held in Belgium. While there King Albert presented her with the Agricultural Decoration of the First Order.

She was the first English-speaking woman to win the award, given for outstanding service to agriculture, and the tenth woman ever to receive it.

Yet she feels the honor was not conferred upon Miss Grace E. Frysinger.

It was given, she believes, to the millions of American farm women who gave her inspiration and encouragement.

9 The Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, has charge of the Indian tribes of the United States. It guards their lands and moneys, buys their supplies, educates them and protects their health.

There are 225,000 Indians on reservations under the care of the Indian Office. The rest of the Indians have been given full citizenship rights and are treated as other Americans. In Oklahoma, for example, some Indians hold political offices.

In former years the Government usually conducted its business with the tribe as a whole. Now more attention is given to the individual and his needs. The Government is trying to train each Indian to take his place as a full-fledged citizen of the United States.

Here are some excerpts from an address by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, delivered to Navajo students just returned from college. It shows what dependence the Government has placed in them:

"You returned students have it in your power to determine the future of your people, because you have been brought into contact with knowledge and it is knowledge which is power and knowledge which moves the world. It is within your reach to place your people under an everlasting debt to you.

"The American Nation needs you and your ideals just as much as you can possibly need the American Nation. That is the point of view of the Indian Bureau today, along with an increased determination to bring you science, modern ideas and all that goes into the making of practical effectiveness and of personal power.

"You must—you can—as Indians take to yourself the heritage of universal man—the gift of the modern world. You must—you can—use that new heritage to save your own native hope. Even as the white man must be faithful to his own, so must you be."

Much of the land set aside for the Indians and once thought of little value has proved to be rich in minerals, especially oil. The Government acts as conservator of this wealth as long as the Indian is unable to handle it wisely. But as soon as he demonstrates his ability to manage his own affairs, the wealth is turned over to him. This is necessary because confidence men and shyster lawyers have found that preying on the uneducated Indian is highly profitable.

These adventurers, with the help of a bottle of "fire water," induce the Indian to buy a car for, say, $5,000. They then arrange with a dealer to purchase the car for a much lower price and pocket the difference.

Indians have been allotted 40,000,000 acres of land, worth about five hundred million dollars, on 117 reservations. This is over half of all lands held in trust for the Indians. Most Indians live in houses now, but on about 20 reservations the tepee is still preferred. Some 26,000 Indians still wear blankets.

American Indians are worth, all told, over a billion dollars. Besides real estate, they have some twenty-five million dollars in tribal funds and thirty-five millions in individual bank deposits. The Osage nation, in Oklahoma, is the richest. Each member of this tribe has an average income of about $11,000 a year from oil royalties.

The principal diseases of the Indian are tuberculosis and trachoma. About 25,000 Indians suffer from the former and about 30,000, the latter. To treat them, the Government employs 150 physicians and operates 78 hospitals and sanitoria.

The Indian, under the new policy of the Government, is becoming more and more willing to co-operate with the white man.

His wealth and his numbers are increasing and, as a result, he is assuming a greater share in our national life.

Cosmic Man.

10 Back of much of the current probings into the character of the cosmic rays, mysterious particles which constantly bombard the earth from outer space, stands Arthur Holly Compton, the University of Chicago's brilliant physicist.

Dr. Compton believes, once the secret of these rays has been unraveled, a clue to the ancient history of the universe will be found. In other words, they may ultimately answer man's age-old question: "Has the universe been in operation forever, or did it start at some more or less definite time in the ancient past?"

Since 1913 Dr. Compton has investigated the nature and origin of cosmic rays. He has himself traveled 50,000 miles to make measurements of their intensity with delicate instruments in the mountains of Panama, Peru, New Zealand, Australia, Hawaii, Canada and Europe.

Born at Wooster, Ohio, 43 years ago, his youth was a fortunate one. His parents were sympathetic with his varying interests. They furnished tools and instruments and books. When he was 10, he wrote an essay setting forth his own theory on the origin of the difference between three-toed and five-toed elephants.

From natural history he progressed to gliders. At 16, he was writing articles on airplane construction and aeronautical theories.

Then a gift telescope turned his mind to astronomy. He built an astronomical clock from an ordinary timepiece, attached a camera to his telescope and took pictures of the stars and planets.

While attending Wooster College, he participated in basketball, baseball and football. Upon graduation, he was sure he wanted to be a mechanical engineer. He got his master's degree from Princeton in 1914, but by that time had become so fascinated by pure physics that he has been a physicist ever since.

Dr. Compton's most noteworthy contribution to science dealt with the behavior of X-rays and electrons ("the Compton effect") for which he won the Nobel Prize in 1927.

One of Dr. Compton's first important inventions was a gyroscopic device to stabilize airplanes in flight. He was the first man ever to photograph an atom, smallest particle in which an element may exist. He has measured the distance between atoms in a crystal; shown that X-rays are reflected by polished mirrors; measured the absolute length of waves of light and the intensity of rays reflected from crystals.

Queen of Flowers.

11 Honolulu, Hawaii, is fast becoming the "orchid capital."

More orchids are grown there than in any other city in the United States or its territories, according to Dr. H. L. Lyon, head of the forestry department of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association.

Orchid is the name of not one flower but an immense family of plants. They are found throughout the world. Over 6,000 varieties are known, the vast majority of which live in the tropics. A few are parasites, living on the sap of trees. But those of temperate regions, such as the lady's slipper, grow in the ground.

Because of their beauty, breeders have developed and named at least 15,000 varieties from the wild species. Some of the rarer kinds bring fabulous prices.

Olives and Engines.

12 All lubricating oil sold in Tunisia, French protectorate in northern Africa, must now contain at least 20 per cent olive oil. This was recently ordered by the government to help the olive growers, who have large stocks on hand and no market.

Pickled olives, the unripe fruit preserved in brine, have been a favorite table delicacy since Roman times.

The cultivation of the olive was probably started by the ancient Egyptians. Homer, the Greek poet, mentions it in his famous epics, the Iliad and the Odyssey. It is frequently mentioned in the Bible.

Among the ancient nations of southern Europe, the olive became the emblem of peace and domestic prosperity. In Greece, a wild olive spray was the winner's trophy in the Olympic games. In Rome the olive crown distinguished the victor in war.

About 1770 olive growing was started in California by Spanish missionaries. It is now an important crop, the yield for 1929 being over 40,000,000 pounds.

Desert Gold.

13 Deep in the scorching desert of Arabia are gold mines mentioned in the Book of Job. A party of English prospectors hopes to reopen them.

According to the prospectors, the mines were worked as early as 1500 B. C. There the Kings of Arabia are supposed to have obtained the gold to pay as tribute to Solomon and David. In later years the Roman Emperors drew most of their gold from the same region.

Of the region Capt. S. C. Bullock, a member of the expedition, writes: "We are the first foreigners to be allowed to travel unrestrictedly in this territory, and have a soldier supplied by the government always with us to show that we are authorized.

"As some of the Bedouins are still suspicious and resentful of foreigners, we have to wear Arab dress."

Ultimate Speed.

14 What is the limit to an airplane's speed? Dr. George W. Lewis, director of research for the National Advisory committee for Aeronautics, says 575 miles per hour. He proved it in tests made at Langley Field, Va.

There the committee, a governmental organization for the "scientific study of problems of flight" maintains its laboratories and wind tunnels.

A wind of 750 miles per hour can be created in one of those tunnels. A stationary model of an airplane in a 750-mile wind should offer the same resistance as a plane traveling 750 miles an hour.

Working on this principle, Dr. Lewis measured wind resistance at various speeds. He found that resistance at speeds over 575 miles per hour was so great that no engine could make headway.

That means it is possible for daring pilots to push planes 135 miles per hour faster than the present record of 440.681 miles per hour. Lieut. Francesco Agello of Italy sped his tiny Macchi-Castoldi seaplane that fast over Lake Garda, Italy, in 1934.

Caves and Cave-in.

15 The earth swallowed a barn, a garage and two automobiles near Jaspar, Fla., the other day. The sub-strata in the region is of lime rock, which dissolves in water. Experts believe an underground river ate away the rock, causing the earth to cave into a bottomless, water-filled pit.

Rivers often flow underground for miles and sometimes form beautiful caverns in limestone regions. Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, was formed thus as were the Carlsbad Caverns of New Mexico.

The latter boast the world's largest series of underground caves. In the Big Room, a chamber 4,000 feet long, 625 feet wide and 300 feet high, there are stalagmites (long icicle-like rock formations) which scientists estimate to be 60,000,000 years old.

The cavern was discovered by Jim White, a cowboy. Originally, it was called Bat Cave.

Cellar Coal Mine.

16 A resident of Shawnee, Ohio, recently revealed he has a coal mine in his cellar. When he needs fuel he pushes his wheelbarrow to the coal vein, loads it and in a few minutes is back at his furnace door.

Coal mining in the early days was, like this, something of a household matter. Those who had a mine near at hand used what implements were available—a windlass, candle and rope. Our illustration shows how it was done about 1556.

The earliest form was simply to remove the dirt when the vein lay near the surface. This method is still employed in the "strip-mines" of the Middle West.

There the overlying earth is removed with teams and scrapers or with steam shovels. Two steam shovels usually work together. One to dig dirt, the other coal.

In the earliest mining days, women and children carried the coal up ladders in baskets. In the old Roman mines they crawled on their hands and knees through small passageways, pushing carts of coal. Today horses or mules do this work, and miners descend into the mines in elevators.

Arctic Derelict.

17 Another derelict ship of the Arctic Sea has been locked in the ice off Point Barrow, Alaska. Unable to reach the vessel, natives and whites meanwhile amuse themselves guessing at its identity. Some hazard that it may be one of seven stanch whalers which sailed into the northern seas 50 years ago and never returned. Others believe it may have been abandoned by early Arctic explorers. The mystery will be cleared up this summer when the ice pack breaks.

One of the first disastrous voyages across the "roof of the world" was made by three ships sent out by "The Mystery Company and Fellowship of Merchant Adventurers for the Discovery of Unknown Lands." The vessels were equipped at great expense. The English King gave their captains letters to the princes of the East. For these explorers proposed to sail across the Arctic Sea to Tartary and Cathay.

They skirted the coast of Norway in 1553. In the seas beyond a severe storm drove them apart. One vessel came at last to the coast of Lapland where it was held in the winter ice until captain and crew died of starvation. Another ship returned to the coast of Norway, but the third ship was never heard of again.

It is hardly possible that the vessel off Point Barrow is this missing ship, locked in the ice pack for 400 years, but stranger things have happened in the Arctic.

WINGS OF THE WORLD

"A pot of gold" awaits the solver of big aeronautical problems. For instance, the Government, upon recommendation of the Secretaries of War, Navy and Commerce, will pay $75,000 for an accepted invention aiding United States aviation.

Some difficult riddles are half solved already; others will be worked out gradually. Some aviation needs are outlined below.

Dispelling Fog—Number 1 pest still is fog. Improved instruments have lessened, but not eliminated the danger. Eugene Vidal, director of Air Commerce, thinks some fog-piercing system is the invention most needed today.

His bureau is interested in a "fog-piercing ray," but electrical experts are pessimistic. However, inventor Samuel E. W. Haines claims to have successfully tested such a ray at Newark Airport.

His machine, resembling a huge searchlight, projects heat which turns the droplets of water composing fog into invisible vapor. But this device is considered much too large to be used in an airplane.

Cold Carburetors—Wing and propeller de-icing mechanisms are almost perfected, but carburetor ice still defies inventors. Danger from the latter source is greatest in spring or fall. Carburetor ice generally forms when temperatures vary between 20 and 55 degrees.

PLANE FACTS
FLAP
"FLAPS" OR "AIRBRAKES" ON FAST PLANES INCREASE WIND RESISTANCE, DECREASE LANDING SPEEDS BY 30 MILES PER HOUR—BUT A DEVICE IS SOUGHT TO LOWER LANDING SPEEDS STILL MORE.

If a plane flying low suddenly climbs into a colder region, warm air in the carburetor immediately condenses into moisture and freezes. To prevent this experimenters have vainly tried heating carburetors. A special fuel is the latest "cure." But this is less powerful and burns faster than regular gasoline.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Back To Treasure Island" by H. A. Calahan. $2.00. Vanguard Press, New York, N. Y. Illustrated.

Jim Hawkins' days of adventure are not over! In this sequel to Robert Louis Stevenson's great adventure yarn, "Treasure Island," Jim again boards the Hispaniola seeking riches on the isle in the Spanish Main. It is a grand tale!

Readers of "Treasure Island" will remember that all the treasure was not found; that Jim invested half of what he got, and hid the other half.

But the investment turns bad. Jim, Squire Trelawney and Dr. Livesey are penniless except for the half the boy had buried. So, regretfully, they decide to go for the remaining riches.

Although memories of the former mission awaken dread, they are not particularly worried, but they're unaware that Long John Silver and his pirate band are stowaways aboard the Hispaniola!

The treasure-seekers get what they're after, but not until more bones are left to rot on the sultry island and Jim meets danger equaling that of his first journey.

"Gentle Julia"—This Twentieth Century-Fox picture is a comedy of small-town life which should provide laughs for the entire family. Featured is that up-and-coming 10-year-old Jane Withers, ably assisted by such other young movie "comers" as Marsha Hunt, Tom Brown and Jackie Searle.

Jane Withers.

Plot—Taken from Booth Tarkington's novel of the same title, the story concerns "gentle" Julia Atwater (Marsha Hunt), whose suitors are many and persistent. Essentially, though, it's the story of not-so-gentle Florence Atwater (Jane Withers), the younger sister. Florence has two missions in life—(1) to annoy to distraction her brother Herbert (Jackie Searle), and his playmate, Henry Rooter (Jackie Hughes), and (2) to break up a romance between Julia and Mr. Crum. The impish miss early achieves No. 1 mission and devotes herself to No. 2. She wishes to accomplish No. 2 to assist her pal, bashful Noble Dill (Tom Brown), to the chief place in Julia's affections. How she does this makes very funny film-fare.

Star—A natural mimic, Jane Withers was impersonating stage and screen stars on an Atlanta (Ga.) stage at the age of 4 . . . In Hollywood did bits in pictures until she got her big chance as the "meanie" in Shirley Temple's "Bright Eyes" . . . Was so "bad," she was very good and got long-term Fox contract.

DOGS

Dog of the Week—Can dogs reason? Jill, 2-year-old Dobermann Pinscher, has convinced her mistress, Mrs. W. W. Dysart, that they can.

Jill Notifies Tom Horton.

"I was alone in my daughter's house, near Lenoir, N. C.," writes Mrs. Dysart. "While removing a coconut shell, the knife I was using slipped and cut two arteries in my left hand.

"Frightened by the spurting blood, I ran into the yard to call Tom Horton, our colored handyman. He was working too far away from the house to hear or see me. Growing rapidly weaker, I soon found I could not return to the house.

"I had not noticed Jill, but she sensed my plight. Off she raced to where Tom was working. By repeatedly barking and running toward the house, she made him understand that he was to follow. He helped me into the house, fetched aid, and I was taken to the hospital. Now the wound is completely healed.

"I do not know how or why Jill acted as she did in this time of emergency. A dog must have reasoning power."

Jill's registered name is Princess Jennie. Upon her has been conferred one of dogdom's honors—The Dog World Magazine's International Diploma of Honor.

Jill's Background — Dobermann Pinschers, derived from Manchester Terriers, have been developed in the last century in Germany. They are used in police work and hunting. Dogology—If dog biscuits are a part of Fido's menu, have a care in choosing them. They should be made of good wheat flour and carefully ground meat. Keep them in a dry place. Never feed a dog under-baked or mouldy biscuits.

JACK TEMPLE'S SECRET MISSION

By GERALD JEROME

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

Synopsis.

On the tropical island of Verdiago, Jack Temple, 16-year-old employe of the Tidewater Transportation Co., is secretly investigating thefts of merchandise and the murder of two warehouse guards. Without revealing his mission, Jack is given a job as guard by Tom Kennedy, resident manager. He does not report having saved the life of Snyder, another guard, to Mr. Frear, the foreman. Snyder tells Jack a cable had been slipped over his foot when the two were on duty in the north warehouse where the robberies and murders have occurred. Snyder quits his job. Jack meets Russ Woods, American boy visiting Verdiago, and from his uncle, Col. William Edmondson, learns there is a double basement beneath the warehouse. Finding his letter of identification from Mr. Robert Neal, company president, stolen, Jack enlists Russ' aid. Russ learns that Mr. Frear had entered the same tavern as Jeffrey Jukes, a stranger who had traveled to Verdiago with Jack and spied on him. On duty alone in the north warehouse, Jack is pursued by a murderer. Jack eludes him by climbing a rafter. He sees a stone slide out of the floor and recognizes Jukes going down into the hidden basement! When Mr. Frear answers his alarm, Jack asks for the rest of the night off. He meets Russ, who tells him that Jukes had climbed out of a tunnel in some old ruins shortly after Jack's escape. Col. Edmondson tells the boys the murderers slip a cable over the foot of their victim, pull him down the hole in the warehouse floor and drag him behind a motorboat until drowned. On the colonel's advice, Russ summons Tom Kennedy to hear Jack's story.

INSTALLMENT XI.

TOM KENNEDY recognized Jack at once and started. Col. Edmondson noticed his surprise. The colonel arose and introduced himself, adding:

"Mr. Kennedy, I see you know this young man and that you're somewhat surprised to meet him here. Sit down, won't you please. He has a story to tell you that has more surprises than one."

Mr. Kennedy, tired and worn looking, sat down rather listlessly. But a minute after Jack began his story the fatigue of the older man disappeared. He sat bolt upright, his eyes fixed on Jack, his face wearing an expression of amazement.

Jack purposely told everything slowly and carefully, omitting not a single incident, even to the flitting smile on Caleb Frear's face when he entered the warehouse and could not immediately locate Jack.

"And Frear is one of my oldest men and the chief watchman!" said Mr. Kennedy. "To think that he's one of the gang!"

"We haven't proved anything on him yet, Mr. Kennedy," said Jack, "but it sure looks mighty bad."

"Indeed it does" exploded Kennedy, now showing a deep and rising anger.

• • • •

COL. EDMONDSON, who was acting as a sort of chairman of the meeting, cleared his throat and turned to Mr. Kennedy.

"Well, Mr. Kennedy, you know all we know now. What do you think should be done next?"

"I think they all ought to be arrested . . . at once," was the excited reply.

"No, you can't do that yet," declared the colonel, soberly. "You'd have only Jack's story and Russ' against them. In order to clean them out, and that's what you want to do—I think you've got to nab them in action."

"So do I, Mr. Kennedy," said Jack vigorously. "You see, I'm sure that one of them stole the letter of introduction Mr. Neal gave me. They want to get me. They'll try again, just as they did last night."

"You've been through plenty of danger already," said Mr. Kennedy. "I think you've done your part—more than anyone else would have thought of doing. I don't want to expose you to a single, solitary thing from now on."

• • • •

"NO," interposed the colonel, "you're wrong, Mr. Kennedy. I don't mean that Jack hasn't done his part, but he's correct when he says the gang wants to land him. There's got to be a last act to this performance if you want to mop things up. Jack's right."

Tom Kennedy seemed lost in thought for some minutes. He placed his face in his hands as though he wanted to think things out. Neither Col. Edmondson, Jack nor Russ said anything. Then Mr. Kennedy outlined a plan of action, asking the others what they thought of it. Col. Edmondson suggest that inasmuch as Jack would run the greatest risk, he alone should make the decision. The colonel, Russ and Kennedy turned to Jack.

The Fierce White Ray of the Spotlight Beat Down on the Escaping Speedboat.

• • • •

"I'm for it," he said simply.

This was the plan: At sundown, after Jack had reported to the warehouse for duty that evening Mr. Kennedy would go at once to the police. He would tell them all that had transpired. While Caleb Frear was on duty at the warehouse a search would be made of his lodgings. Likewise, it would be learned whether Jeffrey Jukes was absent from his rooming house. If so, an identical search would be made of his quarters.

In the meantime, Mr. Kennedy, together with at least four police officers, would board the colonel's yacht, the Wanderer. It would be kept in instant readiness to sail. Russ would remain in the pilot house. At a given signal he would turn up the brilliant searchlight atop the pilot house, flood the nearby waters, keeping the light trained on a small gasoline boat if one happened to be in the vicinity. At another given signal, the Wanderer would take up the chase of the smaller boat.

The police would be instructed to open fire on the gasoline boat the minute she moved. The signal for all operations would be three revolver shots within the north warehouse. These, naturally, would be fired by Jack.

As a final precaution, Mr. Kennedy declared he would have six additional police officers stationed in a house just across the street from the ruined foundation. Once they noticed Jack's signal or the Wanderer's searchlight flash on, they would surround the foundation so as to cut off escape from the underground passageway.

"Well, Mr. Kennedy," said Colonel Edmondson, "I think you have taken everything into consideration. I'm delighted to put the Wanderer at your disposal."

• • • •

THE MANAGER thanked the Colonel warmly. He then leaned over and extended his hand to Jack. The boy grasped it firmly. He was surprised somewhat by the heartfelt warmth of Mr. Kennedy's grip and his smile of gratitude and encouragement.

When Kennedy had left the boat, Colonel Edmondson insisted that both Jack and Russ get some additional rest. Despite the fact they were tremendously excited over the prospects of the evening, both boys managed to fall asleep.

The colonel aroused them at 5 o'clock and they sat down to a good meal. At five minutes to seven Jack left the boat and proceeded to the office in the south warehouse. Caleb Frear and Mr. Kennedy were already there when Jack walked in.

The chief watchman looked at the boy curiously. When Mr. Kennedy's attention was engaged elsewhere he said:

"Get over your scare of last night, kid?"

"Yes," said Jack, thinking he noted a taunting ring to the other's tone. "I came back to work, didn't I?"

In addition to the two other watchman, Jack saw three new men. When the bell sounded all lined up before Mr. Frear as was the usual custom. Tonight, however, after the revolvers had been passed out, Mr. Kennedy took charge of instructing the men.

• • • •

"AS I promised yesterday," he began, "I have some additional men tonight. There will be two men in each warehouse. Mr. Frear will relieve you on your watches. I understand there was another scare last night in the north warehouse. Let me see, John Temple was there at the time, wasn't he?"

Frear grunted an affirmative. Mr. Kennedy, as though he had just remembered he knew "John" Temple, turned to Jack, saying:

"Your name is Temple, isn't it?"

"Yes sir," answered Jack.

"Well, you'll be on duty again tonight in the north warehouse. This gentleman, Abram Hackett, will be your companion."

• • • •

MR. KENNEDY nodded in the direction of Abram Hackett and Jack turned to get a good view of his new comrade. He saw a rugged, well-built man of middle age, who merely glanced at him in the most casual manner.

Jack wondered why he had been paired with the new man, but Mr. Kennedy offered no explanation. A minute later he left the warehouse. Frear then accompanied Jack and Hackett to the north warehouse and locked them in. It was night now and the feeble, yellow light within seemed no more reassuring to Jack.

He was beginning to get a bit worried over the turn of things when Hackett, who was walking slowly beside him, suddenly cupped his hand to his mouth and whispered:

"Tom Kennedy gave me all the dope, son. At the last moment he was afraid something might happen to you, so he sent me along. If you don't think Frear's spying on us I'd just like to shake with you on what you've found out to date."

Jack showed the relief he felt by the manner in which he "shook" with Abram Hackett. Then, without further words, the two began their long and weary vigil. For the first six hours not a single thing happened, other than the regular appearance of Frear for relief duty. Midnight came and went. Then 1 o'clock; 2 o'clock.

Jack and Hackett made complete rounds of the warehouse. They had been through the "cave" a dozen times, at least, and were approaching it again. Hackett was nearest the wall. He had insisted on that position every trip of the night. Suddenly the lights in the warehouse went out. An instant later both felt that ominous rush of cold damp air.

They stopped, involuntarily. Jack put his hand on Hackett's arm. But before they could take a step the man cried out in pain. Jack felt him jerked away from beneath his hand. He tried with might and main to hold on, but it was no use. The man was gone!

It all happened so swiftly that Jack was beside himself with horror. He conquered himself, however, firing his revolver three times in rapid succession—the signal to the outside world! At that moment he saw the beam of a lantern in the hole below. He knew that Hackett, his leg in a vice of steel, was helplessly being dragged to death in the darkened waters under the warehouse.

Without a second's hesitation, Jack did the only thing he thought would help Hackett. With one flying leap he sprang into the gaping hole, shooting past the lantern held by someone. As he hit the water below he saw and grabbed for an outstretched arm of Hackett. There was a sudden rush of water, submerging him. But he held on to Hackett's arm within a vice-like grip. Together they were dragged, at what seemed a terrific speed, beneath the surface of the water. That was as much as Jack remembered.

• • • •

MEANTIME, much was happening outside the old north warehouse. When Jack's signal was heard, Russ Woods, in the pilot house of the Wanderer, snapped on the searchlight and swept the bay in the vicinity of the pier that extended out from the north warehouse.

The broad beam of the light picked up a launch, or rather, a highspeed motorboat. One man, working desperately over a rope in his hands, was in the stern. Three other men were forward, two hovering over the engine as if coaxing it along. The third stood or crouched in the bow.

Immediately the Wanderer, her two huge engines purring smoothly but powerfully, slipped away from her moorings and into Verdiago Bay. She headed straight for the speed boat. The fierce white ray of her searchlight beat down mercilessly upon the four men she was overtaking. Mr. Kennedy and two police officers called "Halt."

Their cry went unheeded.

Then they spoke a more understandable language. A blast of bullets were fired at the speedboat.

It looked, for a moment, as though the smaller boat would outdistance the Wanderer. The police, however, had stationed a revenue cutter close by. Now she took up the chase. From her bow swung a machine gun.

• • • •

AT that moment Russ saw the man in the stern of the speed boat cut the rope he had held. Swiftly turning the big searchlight of the Wanderer, Russ picked up two objects bobbing up and down in the water some 30 yards in the wake of the speed boat.

Russ guessed at once what was tossing on the waves below. Seizing a life preserver he dashed from the pilot house to the starboard rail, and leaped overboard.

His cries brought several sailors to the rail. One followed him into the waters of the bay. Between the two they managed to keep afloat the unconscious forms of Jack Temple and Abram Hackett until assistance came. A few minutes later, with the aid of Col. Edmondson, Mr. Kennedy and the police, they hoisted them aboard ship.

"Never mind the speed boat now, Captain!" Col. Edmondson called out to the chief officer of the Wanderer. "The revenue cutter's run her down and has her in tow. Get back to the wharf as fast as you can."

(To Be Concluded Next Week.)

How and Why?

Heroic Jack Temple has played a winning hand against the gang that robbed and murdered at Verdiago, it appears.

But how did this outfit work?

That will be unravelled in the last installment of this thrilling adventure yarn, to appear next week.

Don't fail to read this smashing climax! It's the answer to all the puzzling questions you and Jack Temple have been frowning over.

ADRIENNE WARNER.

Stamps originated because people resented the previous method of delivering mail. The recipient had to pay the postman. Many times the mail wasn't worth what it cost. Also, various abuses sprang up. The postman might deliver a letter and the recipient, examining it, would say: "It's not for me." Payment would not be made, yet actual instances were discovered showing the recipient had gathered all information he needed from mere examination of the envelope. Thus the government lost out entirely. Finally, it was decided to make the sender pay the charge. An Englishman, Sir Roland Hill, invented the first adhesive postage stamp. Stamps came into common use about 100 years ago.—Ed.

Full manpower in time of war is reckoned as 10 per cent of a nation's population. The United States, therefore, could figure on approximately 13,000,000 soldiers. Great Britain, including her white dominions, about 7,000,000; Germany some 7,000,000. France, with 500,000 active soldiers and 6,000,000 trained reserves, possesses the largest military force in the world today.—Ed.

Tennis Queen Offers Advice

Victor

Patsy Henry Completes a Smashing Backhand Return.

Practice Strokes, Says Patsy Henry

Training and hard practice brought Patsy Henry, 18-year-old Californian, her title as National Girls' Tennis Champion.

"There weren't more than three people in California who thought I had a chance to win," she tells Parade. "I just did my best and hoped my training and hard practice would show up well. I guess it just did."

Patsy began her tennis career very early. Her mother, winner of many cups, gave her her first instructions. When she was 12, she began training under Wynn Mace, well-known Los Angeles instructor. A year later she entered her first tournament.

Her "Long Suit."

But doubles were Patsy's "long suit." Playing on all types of courts, she won several California titles in such matches. Three days before she went to New York to win her national title, she won her first important singles tournament, the Los Angeles Metropolitan Junior championship.

"My present success," writes Patsy from 760 South Bronson avenue, Los Angeles, "is probably due to several causes: Constant practice, the encouragement of my family and the advice of an excellent instructor. Even now, though a sophomore at Occidental College, here, I play about an hour and a half a day.

Be a Good Sport.

"My advice to young players, who want to improve their games, is this: Enjoy everything you do; appreciate the lessons taught you by defeat, and work on your strokes.

"Most of all, work on your temperament. Be a good sport at all costs. If you can't enjoy playing and have others enjoy playing with you, stop the game altogether."

'Gang's' Collection Is Beginning of Museum

Because four high school students had the collecting urge, Washington, N. C., now boasts a fine museum. Many natural history specimens have carried fame of "The Big House Laboratory" over the country.

It was 12 years ago that an enterprising neighborhood gang began collecting plants, insects and stuffed animals. Their first clubhouse was a crude, homemade tent. Today the museum occupies a large log building in a city park.

One of the museum's early homes was a dilapidated frame shack. Here the gang kept its increasing collection of insects. Hence the name, "Bug House." Now the laboratory enjoys a membership in the American Association of Museums and the name has been changed to the Washington Field Museum. But the old name hangs on.

Though the original gang has grown older, youth still maintains the museum. Each year junior members are chosen. From the original four, the membership has grown to about 100 active and honorary members.

About the museum, Mr. L. V. Coleman, director of the American Associations of Museums, says: "The Washington Field Museum is important because its success will stimulate others to do what the young people of Washington are doing."

A Full Sports Program for Evening

For Bernard Rambadt, it was a full evening of sports. He won his bout at the Battle Creek (Mich.) Golden Gloves tournament recently and then raced 30 miles back to Sherwood, his home town, to help his high school basketball team win a game.

Bernard Rambadt.

"At Battle Creek I won the flyweight division bout," writes Bernard. "Then I drove back to the high school. The roads were bad and it was bitterly cold, but I got there in time to go in at forward."

It's easy to believe, when he says, "My hobbies are all kinds of athletics."

Growing Up Together.

Cowboy—Ever ride a horse?

Tenderfoot—No.

Cowboy—Well, here's just the animal for you. He's never been ridden, so you two can start even.

City Hawk

Attacks Boy on Chicago Streets, Gets Killed.

Pennies, nickels, dimes are swelling the fund which Elmer Gourlie is raising to stuff the hawk which attacked him and a friend on the streets of Chicago, Ill.

Elmer, 12, of 650 N. Avers avenue, tells of the attack: "Andy Koslow and I were on our way to school. Near a big church a large hawk swooped down on us.

"We were afraid it was going to hurt us, so Andy hit it with his hand and knocked it down. It started to get up and I kicked it and knocked its head against a post."

Elmer took the hawk to a taxidermist to have it stuffed "so I can show people what I caught," he says. It measured 4 feet across the wings."

British Developing Taste for Baseball

"Assassinate the blawsted umpire! Equip the scoundrel with a topping pair of eye-glasses!"

This English lingo may soon invade the bleachers, for Britishers are at last developing a real enthusiasm for baseball.

In the past three years the game has made great strides on the British Isles. Englishmen are losing their once rabid dislike of the American sport, and it is believed that this season will see it beginning to compete with the traditional game of cricket. There's even talk of importing Babe Ruth to demonstrate the art of "whamming one over the fence."

Must Be Herself.

Jane Withers, juvenile screen star, is great at imitating other people. But she can't give her best imitation on the screen. It is an imitation of Shirley Temple.

Fun Corner

A Sad Blow!

The veterinary was giving instructions to the anxious small boy on how to administer medicine to his sick St. Bernard. "Just put this powder in a two-foot length of pipe," he said, "insert the other end in the dog's mouth and blow the powder down his throat."

Soon the boy came running back, gasping and coughing.

"What's the trouble?" cried the vet.

"I'm dying!" gasped the boy. "That darned dog blew first!"

They Probably Were.

SQUAWK!
AN INDIAN SQUAWKER

Teacher—Now Johnny, Indian women were called squaws. Perhaps you can tell what Indian children were called?

Johnny (dubiously)—Squawkers, teacher?

Exposed!

"Why are you fidgeting about, Oscar?" asked the teacher sternly. Oscar didn't answer, but the class tattle-tale did. "He's got a pin, teacher," he cried.

"Take it away from him and bring it here," commanded the teacher.

A little later Oscar was called on to read. He remained sitting. "Stand up!" said the teacher sharply.

Oscar got red, but didn't budge. "I can't, teacher," he gulped.

"I've had enough of this foolishness," exclaimed the teacher. "Why can't you stand up?"

Oscar fidgeted some more and blurted out—"Because that pin you took away from me held my pants up!"

Brown Milk.

The visiting city girl looked over the herd on her uncle's farm. "Gee, I'm glad you've got a brown cow, Uncle," she bubbled. "Now I'll be able to have my chocolate milk here just the same as in the city!

Not So Public.

The high school student went shopping. Spotting a classy suit he asked the clerk, "Can I try on that suit in the window?"

"Well," hesitated the salesman. "If you don't mind, we'd rather have you use the dressing room."

First and Last.

Young boy at dancing class—May I have the last dance with you?

Belle of the class (rubbing her foot)—You've just had it, my fran'—you've just had it!

A Mystery.

Mother—Helen, do you know what happened to the canary? It isn't in its cage.

Helen—No ma'am. It was there a while ago when I cleaned the cage with the vacuum cleaner.

Shirley Temple Goes Nautical

HEIGH-HO FOR A SAIL, says Shirley, in her red, white and blue nautical dress with a real sailor knot for a collar, and her white coat and initialed muff bag.

FOR SHOPPING, Shirley likes this fine leather bag that looks just like mother's, and holds "just about everything."

THE SMART three-quarter coat is what Shirley likes most about these gay plaid bed-time and lounging pajamas.

HOLLYWOOD'S little sailor insists on ships on her socks, even with this trim frock of blue dotted swiss.

SHIRLEY WENT old-fashioned on her birthday, and wore a quaint embroidered silk frock, with a collar of old Irish lace.

DICK TRACY

HUMPH! YOU HAVEN'T FOUND OUT WHO PUT THAT NOTE IN YOUR SANDWICH! YOU DON'T KNOW WHO SHOT THAT BELLHOP AND STUFFED HIM INTO THE LOCKER AT THE CENTER SHORE HOTEL—AND YOU DON'T HAVE ANY IDEA WHO SHOT GOTHORN! SOME PROGRESS!
SAY, BY THE WAY, CHIEF—WHAT WAS THE TEMPERATURE THE DAY GOTHORN WAS SHOT?
WHAT WAS THE TEMPERATURE? YE GODS, TRACY—HAVE YOU GONE MAD?
WE'RE DEALING WITH MURDER—AND YOU ASK THE TEMPERATURE!
I'LL CALL THE WEATHER BUREAU, DICK.
THE DAY GOTHORN WAS SHOT WE WERE IN THE GRIP OF OUR COLD WAVE. THE TEMPERATURE THAT DAY DROPPED TO TEN DEGREES BELOW ZERO!
THANKS, PAT.
WHO'S THAT?
JIM TRAILER! COME IN, FELLOW. I'VE BEEN ANXIOUSLY WAITING FOR YOU.
CHIEF, JIM TRAILER'S BEEN WORKING ON A PIECE OF EVIDENCE THAT EVEN YOU DIDN'T KNOW ABOUT. A PAIR OF GLASSES!
GLASSES?
THESE SPECTACLES WERE PICKED UP BACK OF THE DOOR TO THE SERVANTS' QUARTERS OF THE HOTEL ABOUT 12 FEET FROM WHERE GOTHORN WAS FOUND WOUNDED!
TRACY FOUND THEM—AND ASKED ME TO KEEP THEIR DISCOVERY A SECRET WHILE I RAN DOWN THEIR OWNERSHIP. I VISITED 22 OPTOMETRISTS BEFORE I MET WITH SUCCESS.
WHOSE SPECS WERE THEY, JIM?
THOSE GLASSES BELONGED TO ONE ATHNEL JONES, RETIRED MANUFACTURER.
ATHNEL JONES? NEVER HEARD OF HIM.
HE DID QUITE A BIT OF RESEARCH IN MECHANICAL REFRIGERATION IN HIS DAY—AND WAS THE INVENTOR OF SEVERAL DEVICES NOW USED IN ARTIFICIAL COOLING.
ARTIFICIAL REFRIGERATION—HM-M.. NATURALLY THAT BRINGS TO MIND THE SUBJECT OF ICE—UH HUH.. ICE! —ER.. WHERE DOES THIS JONES LIVE, TRAILER?
IN THE ARISTOCRATIC SKYCREST HOTEL.
ATHNEL JONES? WHY BOYS—THAT'S THE SAME JONES WHO HAD GOTHORN ARRESTED ABOUT TWO YEARS AGO FOR BLACKMAIL! BUT WHEN THE CASE CAME TO COURT, IT WAS THROWN OUT.
YOU'RE RIGHT, CHIEF.
SNAP
WHAT? YOU WANT ME TO TELEPHONE JUNIOR TO COME HERE?
YES. HE DOESN'T KNOW IT—BUT HE'S GOING TO BECOME A BELLHOP IN THE SKYCREST HOTEL.

SAY, HOOPLE, HOW COME YOU GET BY WITHOUT EVER DOING ANYTHING?
YEAH, LET US IN ON IT, MAJOR. IT'S A GIFT, AIN'T IT?
HMP — KAF-F- QUITE THE CONTRARY. I AND ALL MY ANCESTORS ARE DOERS!
T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
FACT IS — FROM TIME IMMEMORIAL, THE HOOPLES HAVE BEEN MEN WHO DID THINGS.
DON'T TRY TO STRING US WITH THAT LINE! OF ALL THE VISITING HOOPLES THAT YOU HAVE EXHIBITED HERE AT THE OWLS CLUB, I'VE NEVER KNOWN ONE TO LIFT A FINGER.
YEAH, ER DIG A HAND DOWN INTO HIS POCKETS.
FIE ON YOU! FROM THE TIME OF CAESAR, THE HOOPLES HAVE BEEN AMONG THE FOREMOST MEN, WHOSE DEEDS FILL THE PAGES OF HISTORY — — EXPLORERS — NAVIGATORS — EMPIRE BUILDERS — ENGINEERS — HOOPLE BLOOD HAS SURGED THRU THE VEINS OF ALL MANNER OF MEN OF ACCOMPLISHMENT!
FROM OCTAVIUS MARCUS HOOPLE — THE NOBLE ROMAN — THE GREAT ENGINEER — DOWN THROUGH THE AGES.
OCTAVIUS HOOPLE? I NEVER HEARD THE NAME!
ME, EITHER — WHAT DID HE DO?
OCTAVIUS — AH, THERE WAS A MAN AMONG MEN! WHY, DURING THE REIGN OF CAESAR, HE BUILT THE GREAT AQUEDUCT THAT SOLVED THE COLOSSAL TASK OF BRINGING WATER TO ROME.
I'VE OFTEN WONDERED WHERE YOU INHERITED YOUR GREAT THIRST FOR THAT BRAND OF LIQUID, MAJOR!
HACK-KAF-SPUT FUT!
NOW, THIS OCTAVIUS MARCUS HOOPLE —
LET'S SKIP OCTAVIUS, MAJOR!
YEAH! WHO WAS SOME OF THE OTHER HOOPLES THAT DID THINGS.
FUMPF — SPUT-TT — FAW — I CAN TELL, BY THE GLINT IN YOUR EYES, THAT YOU ARE DOUBTERS.
EGAD — WHAT'S THIS GENERATION COMING TO, THAT A MAN OF KNOWN VERACITY CAN'T TELL OF THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF HIS ANCESTORS, WITHOUT SNEERING DOUBTS BEING CAST UPON HIS CLAIMS!
ME? OH, I'VE JUST BEEN JOURNEYING ABOUT TOWN.
OKAY, MARCO POLO, I'VE GOT A JOURNEY TO THE DRESS-MAKER MAPPED OUT FOR YOU! COME ON!
I SEE YOU ARE KEEPING UP THE HOOPLE RECORD FOR DOING THINGS, MAJOR!

I'M GLAD YOU'RE SAFE AT HOME, DENNIE. I SHUDDER TO THINK WHAT MIGHT HAVE HAPPENED TO YOU, IF OLD LOOTER HAD CAUGHT YOU TAKING THAT RECEIPT OFF HIS DESK.
SAY, GRAN'MA, THIS PAPER PROVES THAT MR. LOOTER IS A CROOK, AND WHEN HE FINDS I TOOK IT, HE'LL COME HERE. WE'D BETTER TAKE IT TO THE MAYOR.
A GOOD IDEA, DENNIE.
GEE WHIZ, IT'S WINDY. DON'T LET THAT PAPER BLOW AWAY, GRAN'MA.
NO WIND THAT BLEW COULD TAKE IT FROM ME. IT'LL BRING LOOTER TO JUSTICE.
DO YOU THINK THE MAYOR WILL HAVE OLD LOOTER ARRESTED TONIGHT.
I WOULDN'T BE SURPRISED. THAT WAS A TERRIBLE AGREEMENT HE SIGNED. IT'D BRING MISERY TO THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE.
THE MAYOR WILL BE ABLE TO SEE YOU IN A FEW MINUTES, MRS. WORTH. SIT DOWN.
I DECLARE, I CAME AWAY IN SUCH A HURRY, I LOOK A SIGHT.
AW, THE MAYOR WILL LOOK AT THAT PAPER A LOT HARDER THAN HE WILL AT US.
GRACIOUS HEAVENS, MY SKIRT IS NEARLY FALLING OFF. I FORGOT THAT BROKEN HOOK. HERE, DENNIE, HOLD THIS PAPER WHILE I PIN IT UP.
LOOK OUT, GRAN'MA! YOU DROPPED IT!!
QUICK, GRAB IT, DENNIE!
IT FELL INTO THE FIRE.
LET IT GO, DENNIE, YOU'LL BURN YOUR HAND. DRAT THE EVIL LUCK THAT EVER CROSSED OUR PATH WITH LOOTER'S.
WHY, MARY WORTH, WHAT'S HAPPENED
JUST SOME OF THE BAD LUCK THAT'S BEEN FOLLOWING ME LATELY, YOUR HONOR, AND I'M AFRAID THERE'S MORE TO COME.
MARY TELLS HER STORY TO THE MAYOR.
—AND THAT'S THE WHOLE STORY, YOUR HONOR. I HOPE YOU CAN HAVE LOOTER ARRESTED EVEN IF THE PAPER DID BURN UP.
I'M AFRAID I CAN'T—
MARTHA ORR
I BELIEVE YOUR STORY, BUT LOOTER IS VERY POWERFUL POLITICALLY, AND NONE OF US DARE MAKE A MOVE AGAINST HIM UNLESS WE HAVE POSITIVE PROOF OF HIS GUILT.

GASOLINE ALLEY
BRICK, I'M STILL WORRIED ABOUT OUR BORROWIN' EGGIE'S CAR WITHOUT ASKIN' HIM.
MAYBE WE DIDN'T HIT ANYBODY AFTER ALL.

NOT A THING. IF THERE'S ANY TROUBLE IT WILL FIND US SOON ENOUGH.
EGGIE'S LOOKIN' FOR YOU. HE KNOWS YOU KIDS HAD HIS CAR OUT.
SISSY, WHO TOLD HIM?
I DID, AND HE KNOWS ABOUT THE ACCIDENT, TOO.
ACCIDENT?
BRICK! EGGIE HAS FOUND OUT EVERYTHING!
ONE GUESS. SISSY SPILLED THE BEANS!
HEY YOU!
YOU TWO BIRDS THOUGHT YOU WERE GETTING AWAY WITH SOMETHING. YOU HAD MY CAR OUT AT NIGHT!
WE DID IT JUST FOR FUN, EGGIE.
YES! WHAT ABOUT THE ACCIDENT?
WHAT WAS IT EGGIE? WAS IT REALLY BAD?
BAD! IT WAS TERRIBLE! YOU ARE BOTH IN FOR IT NOW.
LOOK! IT'S GOING TO COST YOU INSECTS 65 CENTS APIECE TO GET THAT LAMP STRAIGHTENED UP.

THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About the Youngster Who Won the National Trapshooting Titl

We are at the Grand American Handicap, greatest event in trapshooting. The best men in the country have fired their hundred shots. Now a 14-year-old boy is taking his turn. Cool and deliberate, he smashes 50 clay pigeons without a miss.

In the second 50, the boy's composure is upset by the throng which mills about, marveling at his shooting. He misses once, twice, three times. His mark stands at 96 broken in 99 shots. He must get this hundredth pigeon to tie with two grown men who have broken 97. The boy is tense, overwrought. The crowd waits, breathless.

Three times he raises his gun. Three times he lets it fall from his shoulder. He can't do it . . . Then, suddenly, he seems to regain his self-control. To break the tension he steps calmly off the "peg" and wipes the damp soles of his shoes. The crowd is numb with suspense.

Back onto the "peg" he steps and, in a clear, boyish voice, shouts, "Pull!" As the clay flies into the air he shatters it with a perfect shot!

And the next day Alfred Rufus King of Wichita Falls, Tex., came back to win the greatest event in trapshooting away from the two men with whom he had tied—at Vandalia, Ohio, August, 1930. Hats off to the eyes, hands, nerves—and nerve—of a champion.

Baseball . . . . By NED BRANT

Playing Second Base

You second sackers must learn to move fast enough so you can stop most balls straight in front of you. Then if you miss, or the ball takes a bad hop, it may hit your leg. If it does, you can recover it quickly.

Also, you lads must learn to throw underhand from a stooped position. Straightening up and drawing back the arm takes valuable time.

In executing double plays, don't throw or toss the ball to the shortstop. Throw or toss it at an imaginary point chest-high above the base, timing it so the ball and the shortstop reach there at the same time. It is the shortstop's job to be there.

As a general rule, shortstops cover second when there is a man on first and a lefthand batter hitting. The opposite is true when the hitter bats right-handed.
